Gas Firm Offers Cut of $850,000 In Capital Rates

Would Add $350,000 Cut to the Temporary $500,000 Decrease.

Approval Is Due Within 2 Weeks

Approves Gas Rate Cut

WILLIAM A. ROBERTS.

Reduction of rates by $850,000 a year, effective December 1, and a sliding scale plan for future readjustment of their rates was proposed to the Public Utilities Commission yesterday by the Washington Gas Light Co. and its subsidiaries, the Georgetown Gaslight Co. and the Prince Georges Gas Corporation.

A new rate base of $21,000,000, plus a working capital of $750,000—several millions less than the valuation the companies have contended for in public hearings—was proposed by the companies.

The basic rate of return was fixed at 6½ per cent of the rate base.

Approval of the plan is expected to be given by the utilities commission following a public hearing within the next two weeks.

The proposal of the companies was indorsed by William A. Roberts, people's counsel, at whose suggestion conferences looking to such an agreement were initiated last August, and by E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel, and Hinman D. Folsom, special assistant corporation counsel, attorneys for the commission.

Roberts Urges Adoption.

"The proposal of the companies is in exact accordance with a basis for settlement and a sliding scale arrangement which is satisfactory to me as the representative of the consumers of the District of Columbia," Roberts said in a report to the commission. "I recommend its adoption."

The proposed reduction in rates represents the current temporary discount of 8½ per cent ordered by the commission two years ago and continued in effect until December 31 next by a series of temporary extension orders, and, in addition, a further reduction of 5 per cent.

Th 8½ per cent discount has applied to all bills and amounts to $500,000 a year. The proposed additional 5 per cent reduction would amount to $350,000, it was estimated.

Outright reduction of all gas rates by 13½ per cent is not expected to be ordered by the commission, however. The agreement proposed by the companies did not attempt to apply the reduction to the various rate schedules. They are prepared to submit immediately new rate schedules providing for the $850,000 cut in rates, they said.

Householders to Benefit.

A "substantial part" of the reduction will be applied to the ordinary household rate, it was said informally at the comission. A considerable part will be applied also to the household heating rate schedule. Changes probably will be made in charges, aside from rates, now levied in connection with such heating plants and services. The companies are anxious to have the advantage of what they describe as "promotional rates" in certain schedules. Such rates would be designed to increase use of gas. The rate at which gas is sold to the District and Federal governments is fixed by Congress and consequently will remain at 70 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. Some changes are expected to be made in all other rate schedules, except the rate charged other companies, however. The greatest benefit will go to the household consumer.

Both the rate base and the 6½ per cent rate of return are less than they could get if they pushed the valuation and rate cases to a final settlement in the courts, the companies told the commission. Record of the valuation hearings "will sustain a rate base several millions of dollars in excess" of the proposed

Battle Opens On AAA Taxes In High Court

By Robert C. Albright.

Fighting to stave off a Supreme Court injunction against rice processing taxes, and defending validity of the AAA under an earlier court challenge, the Government yesterday was kept on the defensive in another farm law test when the Supreme Court agreed to receive the State of Georgia's suit against the Bankhead act's legality.

Developments came swiftly in the New Deal's battle to establish the constitutionality of its laws, with the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution playing a prominent part in its defense. Although processing tax and cotton law litigation held the center of the stage, the Supreme Court accelerated its machinery to hear arguments December 19 on the validity of TVA power sales.

Rice Ruling Likely.

The high tribunal gave the Government until Thursday to answer suits of eight southern rice millers for a temporary injunction to forestall AAA collections of September processing taxes. The millers contend that unless collection is enjoined, they will be unable to recover their taxes even if the law is later held unconstitutional. Yesterday the court advised them no action could be taken by the Government in levying special assessment until their suit has been passed on.

A ruling on the rice processing tax case appeared likely before the Hoosac Mills' challenge of all processing taxes levied under the original AAA law reaches the hearing stage December 9. Late yesterday the Government replied to the Hoosac suit. Attorney General Homer S. Cummings filed a brief representing processing taxes in the Hoosac case as "a valid exercise of the powers of Congress under the Constitution."

A ruling on the constitutionality of the Bankhead cotton control law was assured when the high court consented to receive the Georgia suit, filed at the behest of Gov. Eugene Talmadge, outspoken New Deal critic.

Spokesman Predicts All Will Defy SEC Registration.

Plan for Legal Battle Against Government Is Under Way.

By the Associated Press.

A major legal battle, with 100 utility holding companies asking the courts to halt Government enforcement of the holding company act, was predicted yesterday in informed utility circles.

The forecast was by a usually authoritative spokesman that virtually all companies would announce shortly a refusal to register with the Securities Commission, as required by the act, by December 1.

After that date they would theoretically become subject to the act's penalties for not registering. Immediate effective administration of the statute would become virtually impossible and might turn largely upon efforts to force compliance.

Changes Possible.

The utility spokesman, who declined to be quoted on the ground that he could not speak for the entire industry, conceded there was a possibility of last-minute changes by a few companies. Even this, he contended, was highly improbable, unless new and unpredictable elements enter the situation.

The utility act is designed to provide Federal control over the interstate utility field and to eliminate "unnecessary" utility holding companies.

During the day, a new argument against registration by the holding companies with the securities commission was advanced by Dr. Hugh S. Magill, president of the American Federation of Investors.

"The best legal talent," he said in a statement, "seems to be quite unanimously of the opinion that if the companies register under this act they will thereafter be deprived of the right to carry on even the normal processes of their business without bureaucratic approval, and that they will thereby seriously impair their rights to protest in the courts against the unconstitutionality of the act.

Fines Threatened.

"Under the express provisions of this utility act it is an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment for any person employed or retained by any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, to present, advocate, or oppose any matter affecting any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, before the Congress or any member or committee thereof, or before the commission or Federal Power Commission, or any member, officer, or employe of either such commission, unless such person shall have secured permission from the commission so to do by complying with certain rules which the commission may lay down."

The utilities spokesman, who would not be quoted, said he expected the companies to seek injunctions against enforcement of the act at about the same time in Federal courts throughout the country.

The initial suits later may be joined, or the utilities and the commission together may agree on one or more suits to test the act's legality.

Register December 1.

The utilities, he said, believe their action is warranted by the legal doubt cast on the validity of the act by the all-embracing decision in Baltimore Federal Court that it is unconstitutional.

Registration on December 1, in itself, means simply the filing of information about a company's financial and operating structure, together with a notification of intention to register more fully later. Full registration would enable the commission to determine what companies should be permitted to live under the act.

The commission has guaranteed initial registration would void no legal or constitutional right, but the utilities were said to believe past court decisions indicate the commission cannot legally give such a privilege.

On Trial for Murder

EDITH MAXWELL.

Hill Girl Slew To Save Self, Mother Says

But Mountaineers Turn on Teacher Tried for Killing Father.

By the United Press.

Wise, Va., Nov. 18.—A mountain mother, her face pinched with grief, went to the witness chair late today to try to save her high-spirited daughter from death or prison for the murder of the head of their household.

Across the rural courtroom, jammed to the doors with the hill people from the trail of the lone pine, sat the daughter, Edith Maxwell, a girl who explored the outside world and got new ideas of life and morals. Edith was put on trial today charged with murdering her father, Trigg Maxwell, because he tried to rule her life according to the ancient code of the hills.

Mother and daughter had heard in five brief hours all the evidence in possession of the Commonwealth. The State rested at 4 p. m. after trying to prove that Edith planned the murder of her father for months because he refused to let her go out with young men. The defense contends the father, on the night he was slain, waited with a knife and a club to punish the girl.

Edith Weeps in Court.

Edith dabbed at her eyes with a handkerchief as witnesses for the Commonwealth told how she brazenly stood close—"with bodies-a-touching"—to a boy on the highway in broad daylight. And how she had stayed out past midnight with Raymond Meade, heedless of the curfew that shrills its warning across the hills three hours after sundown.

Then Mrs. Maxwell came to the stand as the first witness for the defense. There was no color in her cheeks and she crouched in the chair like a person afraid of the unknown. She said she had been married to Trigg Maxwell for 34 years. He drank hard, she added, and on the night Edith came home from a party up the road he had been taking beer 'most all day."

Mrs. Maxwell was in bed and this is what she said happened when she was awakened by the noise in the other room:

"Trigg was a-fussing because Edith had been out and he says 'I ought to be taking a club and

U.S. Industry Split on Pact With Canada

Leaders Within Same Groups Differ As to Effect of Treaty.

Wallace Declares Deal Will Boost Pay Rolls and Aid Farmer.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Sharp criticism of the new American-Canadian reciprocal trade pact from lumber, cattle, dairy and several other groups in the United States hit by its provisions, along with praise of the agreement from manufacturing and Administration quarters yesterday marked the country's reaction to this momentous experiment in stimulating foreign trade.

The criticism, while sharp and even bitter, however, was not widespread. It chiefly came from lobbyists of the interests on whose commodities the American tariff had been cut. There also was some criticism from political figures, but on the whole the politicians stayed out of the controversy, at least for the first day.

Possibilities that the American-Canadian pact would figure in next year's presidential campaign existed, but as a local issue in several communities, such as the Pacific Northwest and in the dairy country adjacent to the Dominion, rather than as a nation-wide sweeping issue on the merits of trade reciprocity.

Even spokesmen from the same State, in some instances representing the same interests, were divided in their reaction. For instance, some of the liquor industry applauded the reduction of $5 to $2.50 a gallon in the tariff on whisky at least four years old, while others criticized. Several distillers expressed indifference.

Wallace Defends Pact.

Expressing privately gratification over the reception given their handiwork, Administration leaders who had charge of negotiating the trade agreement realized that it was necessary for them to defend it against all attacks.

The first shot in defense of the pact—aside from the exposition made public on Sunday—came as an analysis of the effect on farmers from Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, who predicted that the agreement would result not only in increased American exports but increased employment among Americans and increased domestic consumption of American farm products.

Coincidental with the attack on the American-Canadian pact, two of the State Department's foremost trade experts today will undertake a defense of the Hull reciprocal program. Assistant Secretray of State Francis B. Sayre, in an address at the second annual Marine Exhibition in New York, will speak on "Increased Exports with a Diminishing Export Balance, an Omen of Sound Recovery."

Dutch Treaty Next.

Henry F. Grady, chief of the trade agreements section of the State Department, will speak on "The World Seeks Commercial Peace" before the National Foreign Convention in session at Houston, Tex.

Meanwhile the State Department's experts turned their attention to completing their negotiation of similar trade pacts with The Netherlands, France, Spain and Switzerland. Conclusion of the proposed agreement with The Netherlands is expected within the next two weeks. A delegation of Dutch trade experts, who have been here for several weeks carrying on the negotiations, yesterday were received by President Roosevelt.

Japan to Invade China Tomorrow If New State Is Not Set Up in North

New Autonomous Rule Seems Assured by Ultimatum.

'Useless' to Resist, Area's Leader Says

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Peiping (Tuesday), Nov. 19.—The Japanese army has threatened to move 11 divisions of troops into North China at dawn tomorrow unless Chinese leaders of the north declare an autonomous state, Hsiao Cheng-Ying, governor of Chahar, said today.

Hsiao is a spokesman for Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, commander of the Peiping-Tientsin military area.

The Japanese threats were voiced by Maj. Gen. Kenji Doihara, political expert of the Japanese army in China, Hsiao said. He intimated Gen. Sung will obey the Japanese army's orders, "since resistance would be useless."

Hsiao revealed that Gen. Doihara, since November 7, has been pressing Gen. Sung to form a completely autonomous government including the provinces of Hopeh, Shantung, Chahar, Shansi and Suiyuan—an area estimated to be nearly one-third as large as the United States.

Linked to Army.

The new regime nominally would be connected with the central Chinese government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek in Nanking, but in reality would be autonomous and would depend on the Japanese army for its existence.

Japanese advisers would be appointed to assist each Chinese official—as in Manchukuo, which was severed from China and made into an independent state following the fighting of 1932.

The Kwantung army (the Japanese army in China) is ready to move five divisions into Hopeh, and six divisions into Shantung, Hsiao said. If Chinese leaders rejected the Japanese advice, Gen. Doihara is prepared to annex North China to Manchukuo and move Emperor Kang Teh (the former Chinese boy Emperor Henry Pu Yi) from Hsinking to Peiping, Hsiao said.

The Chinese leaders must act tomorrow or the Japanese army will, the governor continued, adding that he had been barely able to avert an immediate Japanese invasion.

"The Japanese already had concentrated troops at Shanhaikwan (gateway into North China from Manchukuo) and were prepared to march on Tientsin and Peiping last night," Hsiao said. "We managed to avert this by last-minute negotiations with Gen. Doihara and Maj. Gen. Hayao Tada, the Japanese commander."

Council to Rule.

The new state will be governed by the "autonomous council of the Republic of China," Hsiao said.

Gen. Sung may be chairman of the council. He formerly was governor of Chahar, but was ousted under Japanese pressure. When he became commander of the garrison here he made friends with the Japanese and since then has been one of the most important pro-Japanese leaders in the north.

The new regime will be completely independent in civil, military and financial affairs. Chinese officials now in office probably will be retained for the time being.

A majority of Chinese appeared reconciled to the movement and many of them vociferously were in favor of it because of their opposition to Nanking financial policy and the tax situation.

North Chinese generally have refused to obey the Nanking edict nationalizing silver, depositing their silver in Japanese banks in Tientsin. Tax remittances to Nanking stopped last month following a brief peasant tax rebellion.

Meantime in Tokyo the Nanking government made a frantic effort to avert the catastrophe which an independent North China will mean for Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek and his associates.

M. C. K. Ting, charge d'affaires in the Japanese capital in the absence of the Ambassador, Gen. Chiang Tso-Pin, who is in Nanking, conferred secretly with Vice Min-

Fiery Fiorello Flays PWA Red Tape

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York as he criticized the PWA Administration yesterday for "red tape" which, he told the United States Conference of Mayors, has set the works relief program back four or five months.

Mayors to Ask Permanent Aid By U. S. Works

LaGuardia Assails, Lauds Phases of New Deal Relief Program.

By Felix Bruner.

Continuation of work relief on a permanent basis will be asked by the United States Conference of Mayors, meeting in annual convention here, it was indicated yesterday.

Mayors from nearly 100 of the country's largest cities appeared to be unanimous in their belief that the relief problem is passing from an emergency to a permanent phase and that local communities will not be able to bear the burden without aid from Washington.

At the same time, the mayors are expected to go on record as favoring complete decentralization of the relief administration, with local rather than Federal officials controlling the actual distribution of money.

While resolutions covering relief and other municipal problems will not be voted on until Wednesday, discussion during the first day of the convention plainly indicated the trend that will be taken. The mayors and other city officials attending the meeting will call at the White House this afternoon to be greeted by President Roosevelt.

LaGuardia Leads Off.

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York opened the relief discussion with a talk combining equally outspoken praise and criticism of the manner in which Federal relief is being administered. Today, Harry L. Hopkins, New Deal relief boss, will discuss the future of relief and then submit to a barrage of questions, some of which may not be too friendly.

LaGuardia's talk was in the nature of a report on his activities as a member of the allotment board, which recommended distribution of money in the works program. His

Meeting of Grand Council Kept Secret; Boycott Is Met Quietly.

The War Crisis.

Embassies in Rome, particularly the British, were heavily guarded as Italy met economic sanctions from League nations with flags flying. Fascist leaders were believed to fear United States neutrality moves might help cripple Italy.

Ras Seyoum, Ethiopian leader in the north, with 30,000 troops was reported entrenched in a mountainous stronghold behind the Italian lines northwest of Makale. Three Italian native columns were rushed to meet the new menace.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Nov. 18.—Premier Benito Mussolini expounded war politics for two hours tonight to his powerful Fascist grand council, but what he said was kept from Italy and the world.

The council, meeting at Palazzo Venezia for the second time in 48 hours and at the close of a day in which 51 League of Nations powers had thrown up a wall of economic sanctions around the Fascist state, issued a terse communique which said merely that it had listened to Il Duce's orders and had decided to meet again December 18.

To Italians this meant the nation's supreme executive body was satisfied with Mussolini's conduct of the "eye-for-eye" policy he has adopted to combat sanctions, and now is content to await developments.

The capital resounded to the measured tread of heavy detachments of troops, marching home in the rain after standing guard at the embassies, legations and consulates of sanctionist nations throughout the day.

Hoover Quoted as Declaring He May 'Have to Run in '36'

"Sometimes Those Things Are Necessary," He Is Reported to Have Told Innkeeper; Baltimore Republicans Say He Denied Candidacy.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 18.—An incident in a Monticello hotel, during which Herbert Hoover was quoted as referring to the possible "necessity" of his running for President, stirred political comment in upstate New York tonight.

Mrs. Gussie Machson, proprietess of the Monticello Inn, where the former President spent last night, quoted him today as saying he might "have to" run again for the Nation's highest office.

The quotation was given by telephone to Albany and for verification Mrs. Machson sent the Associated Press a telegram. It follows:

"Herbert Hoover arrived Monticello Inn 7:30 p. m. Sunday night with Benjamin S. Allen and chauffeur. Big following of guests followed him in. Before Mr. Hoover went to bed conversed with Mrs. Machson, of Monticello Inn. She asked him if he is going to run for President. He said: 'Sometimes you have to do those things but couldn't say definitely,' Send papers to inn."

Hoover traveled this morning to Binghamton by train. A flat denial was issued there by Allen.

From Baltimore meanwhile two officers of the Maryland Federation of Young Republicans recalled Hoover said recently he is not a candidate for the 1936 Republican Presidential nomination.

Charles H. Cover, vice president, and Harry L. Katz, chairman of the executive committee of the federation quoted him as saying there are approximately 21 candidates and that he is not one of these.

But Hoover remained silent. Twice he refused to comment on Mrs. Machson's statement and then boarded a train for Buffalo.

At Binghamton he visited William H. Hill, publisher, who was his New York State campaign manager in 1928 and assistant Eastern States campaign manager in 1932.

Allen said Hoover had been asked by a newspaperman at the hotel if he would be a candidate.

"He replied that the question was premature, that what he is interested in now is the issues," Allen said.

3 Negroes on Fairfax Jury, Echoing Scottsboro Decision

Traditions of more than half a century were shattered yesterday when three colored persons were named for jury duty in felony cases in the Circuit Court of Fairfax County, Va.

Not since the days of the "carpet bagger" following the War Between the States have colored persons been accorded recognition on the trial jury lists in historic Fairfax Courthouse.

It is believed that the decision in the Scottsboro case prompted Judge Walter T. McCarthy to include the names of three colored men on the list to serve during the November term of court.

Those whose names were drawn for service were Gus Burke, of Centerville; Thomas P. Harris, of Mount Vernon, and William H. Randall, of Falls Church.

When the trial of cases opens next Monday two colored women, L. Louise Carpenter and Mary Louise Carpenter, mother and daughter, will be tried on arson indictments. When the two were indicted for burning a dwelling last spring by a grand jury composed of white persons, their attorney, E. J. DeJarnette, raised the constitutional question of the absence of colored persons from the jury lists.

A special grand jury composed entirely of colored persons was then summoned by Judge McCarthy and the two women again were indicted.

The November term of court opened yesterday with one of the quietest sessions in the history of the court. Due to the lack of felony cases no grand jury was summoned.

Chest Coercion in U. S. Offices Denied; Fund Hits $1,212,246

Coercion of Government employes for Community Chest contributions was bluntly denied yesterday as gifts in the campaign for $1,877,900 reached $1,212,246.

John F. Victory, secretary of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, chief speaker at a Willard Hotel luncheon of solicitors, struck back at Chest critics for spreading "erroneous" reports.

"Any Government worker who feels he has been compelled to give," he said, "can tell the Chest about it and get his money back in cash."

Some Federal employes, Victory added, do not know the "real facts" about the drive. He suggested the volunteer workers should answer those who talked about coercion.

"They object to being coerced," he said, "but, of course, the Chest doesn't permit coercion at all."

Victory asked that pledges from persons who did not intend to pay them be discouraged.

"I know one person," he related, "who has made a 100 per cent pledge for three straight years and hasn't paid a penny. Such unpaid pledges cause the Chest to have to borrow money.

"It would be much more honorable for the employe who uses the shield of coercion to say at the outset, 'I won't give.' To make a pledge and not pay it is moral dishonesty.

"Don't forget, though, that most Government workers are self-respecting and when confronted with the facts will come across 100 per cent plus. So bring the facts home to them and their enlightened in-

Wallace Urges Permanency In Farm Plans

Problem in Agriculture Is of Nation-Wide Scope, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Asserting that the time has come to "shift from an emergency basis into a long-term permanent and economically sound program," Secretary Wallace yesterday urged the farmers of the country to regard the problem as national in character.

"We have a man-sized job on our hands," Wallace told delegates to the convention of the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities. "We can't get to first base unless the farmer looks beyond his line fence to his neighbor, to his region and to the Nation.

"Unless the farmers can learn to make the necessary mental and emotional adjustments, we are licked before we start."

Planning Urged.

The Agricultural Secretary then forecast an era of regional agricultural adjustment, and urged development of county planning by farm leaders during the coming winter.

"You will be hearing a good deal about regional adjustment," he said.

Recalling four regional meetings held with extension workers and college officials last summer, Wallace said that "we are at last approaching the agricultural problem as we should have in 1933 had there been time."

The emergency programs then put into effect, Wallace said, had "serious shortcomings," and added that the time has come "to shift from an emergency basis."

Wallace viewed county agricultural planning as involving a continued balancing of production to meet market requirements, soil conservation, and the simplification of adjustment machinery. Development of the adjustment programs locally through discussions with farm leaders in each county was suggested.

Despite the "splendid Canadian tariff agreement," Wallace said, "it does look as though we are going to be under necessity for quite some years yet of making adjustments as sensibly as possible to the foreign markets as they exist."

Myers Is Speaker.

"I look on county planning as one of the most significant things extension workers and experiment stations can work at this winter," he said. "It can be done, but it is a tremendous mechanical job."

W. I. Myers, Farm Credit Administration governor, told the convention in a statemnt that thousands of farmers "largely victims of the depression, were forced to pay blood-sucker interest before they found they were eligible for loans" by production credit associations. Myers said the "blood-sucker" interest rates in most instances ran from 24 to 42 per cent a year.

Myers earlier had been at a conference with President Roosevelt, Secretary Morgenthau and Secretary Wallace, at which the farm-financing situation was canvassed.

Roosevelt's Widow Suffers a Relapse

By the Associated Press.

Glen Cove, N. Y., Nov. 18.—Mrs. Edith Kermit Roosevelt, widow of Theodore Roosevelt, suffered a relapse today accompanied by heart weakness, Dr. Richard Derby reported in a bulletin at 8:30 p. m.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who is 74 years old, incurred a leg fracture last Wednesday and has since been in the North Country Community Hospital here.

Dr. Derby's bulletin follows:

"Mrs. Roosevelt suffered a relapse this morning, marked by heart weakness. This condition, although somewhat abated this evening, still continues."

War's War, But Ethiopia Likes to Trade With Italy

Aduwa, Ethiopia (Sunday), Nov. 17 (AP).—Native Ethiopian merchants have been quick to adopt modern methods. Ten of them, it was announced today, have purchased trucks and obtained permission to trade back and forth between Asmara, Eritrea and Aduwa.

In the first half of November, 213 permits were granted by Italian authorities to caravans going from here to Eritrea with honey, wax and cereal and coming back with salt, coffee, sugar, utensils, cloth and foodstuffs.

Between You and Me

G. O. P. Sits Tight on Trade Pact; Most of Protests From Paid Agents; Treaty Held Skillful Job.

By Raymond Clapper

REPUBLICAN national committee strategy with regard to the Canadian trade agreement probably will be to sit tight, say little, if anything, and let Nature take its course for a while.

The chairman of the Republican national committee, Henry P. Fletcher, was chairman of the United States Tariff Commission under Hoover. He is receiving much advice as to how to handle the issue raised by the Canadian trade agreement, but since he happens to know a good deal about how tariffs are made, and some of the practical trade considerations involved, he also knows enough not to rush into a blind attack.

Before he discusses the Canadian treaty, Mr. Fletcher will not only study it thoroughly himself, but will obtain the results of research by other experts. Furthermore, there is no rush. The treaty rates go into effect January 1. Several months of operation under these new rates will elapse before the Republican national convention meets. By that time something will be known about the effects. Then the Republicans will be able to take a position on the basis of facts. Synthetic protests now going up from special interests are based on what may happen.

Another thing about these protests is that they come largely from paid agents of certain groups. These lobbyists make their living by representing various industries and various farm groups. They hold their jobs by battling at Washington in behalf of the groups they represent. If there is nothing to battle about, they must at least create the illusion that there is. Without a cause, their membership loses interest and the contributions fall off.

First comment on the trade agreement now appearing comes mainly from this class of spokesmen. They began before the terms were known. Some were caught off-base, particularly the dairy interests, because the quota restrictions thrown around the reduced duties unexpectedly prevent complete letting down of the barriers. This makes some of the complaints sound a trifle hollow—as for instance in the case of milk producers who are attempting to argue that the importation of an amount of cream or milk equivalent equal to a pint a year for each person in the United States will wreck their business.

Republicans for the time being will let the attack on the Canadian agreement develop on a local or sectional basis. Individual Senators and Representatives will assail reductions in commodities produced from their respective constituencies. Party spokesmen, generally speaking, will be inclined to wait and see what progress the agents of various interests make, and thus gradually locate possible specific points of sound attack.

For the moment Republican party leaders generally are inclined to regard the treaty as a skillful job and one which is well-hedged, on paper at least, against a general political attack.

One of the chief general arguments which the Administration will use in defending the treaty against Republican attack will be that it mainly puts rates back to the Republican Fordney-McCumber duties of 1922 and wipes out the higher levels of the Hoover Administration's Hawley - Smoot tariff which was widely criticized as excessive by many Republicans. Before the campaign is over, Republicans who were in Congress when the Fordney-McCumber act was voted may find their criticisms of specific reductions in the present treaty answered with citations from their own votes in 1922.

By coincidence, the same newspapers which carried announcement of the opening of trade doors between the United States and Canada also announced that 52 nations had shut trade doors against Italy in an attempt to break Mussolini. Both instances are evidence of how trade is supplanting military force as an instrument of national destiny. The illustration would be perfect except for the embarrassing fact that the same newspapers also report that Japan's military machine has moved forward in China and that under its bayonets a new puppet state is to be set up in North China to keep Manchukuo company.

Political Parade: A ghost of the past came back when E. Mont Reily, of Kansas City, predicted that Senator Arthur Vandenberg, of Michigan, would be the Republican Presidential nominee. Reily became famous when he picked Harding as a long shot in 1920 and won. He pestered Harding for months after the nomination and exhibited to all who would look a worn newspaper clipping which quoted his prediction. Harding finally shipped him to Puerto Rico as governor, but Reily bungled the job so badly he had to be pulled out. For more than a decade he has lived in political obscurity, not even controlling his own precinct . . . Vandenberg says he has no representatives anywhere . . . Herbert Hoover's friends are elated at the speculation as to whether he is a candidate or not. It is working into a Nation-wide build-up which can be used as a springboard if the chances of getting the nomination look like a reasonable gamble a few months hence. Talk that he only wants to prevent Borah from being nominated makes a good smoke-screen to hide behind for the time being . . . This is the season when the far-sighted political letter writer goes to work. He writes to each possible Presidential candidate predicting his nomination and receives a gracious reply from each. The letters are filed away. After the nomination is made the letter written months previously to the winner is hauled out and presented for collection. The others, of course, are destroyed. An old trick, but it still works . . . President Roosevelt has taken hostile publishers into camp on the Canadian treaty. He guarantees them a duty-free supply of Canadian print paper. He also induced Canada to let American magazines in free. Some of these American magazines have had to pay a duty as high as 15 cents a copy to be sold in Canada. Therefore, in this instance, some of his severest critics in the publishing world will be able to rise above principle, and make the best of the situation.

Following the usual custom, the trade agreement negotiated between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King might be called the Roosevelt-King treaty. Some Republicans, however, are suggesting that it ought to be known as the King Roosevelt treaty.

Texan Confesses In 'Live Burial'

Feud Victim Breathed in Crude Grave.

By the Associated Press.

Newton, Tex., Nov. 18.—Sheriff T. S. Hughes said tonight a third man confessed he took part in the shooting and burial alive of Richard Ridgeway, 40, five years ago in this feud-ridden valley.

The man, whose name he would not reveal, assertedly corroborated the statement of Vernon Wells, 28, a Port Arthur refinery worker, that Wells' father, the late Pete Wells, had shot Ridgeway and buried him while he still breathed in a crude grave in the middle of a highway.

Wells and his brother-in-law, Albert (Pete) Williams, a farmer, are charged with murder for allegedly aiding in the burial.

On a mysterious tip, Sheriff Hughes dug up the skeleton of Ridgeway last week. The sheriff plans to dig up the skeleton of another man, killed eight years ago, and endeavor to solve "several other mysteries."

N. Y. Substitute For NRA Act Is Held Invalid

Fair Trade Act Ruled Unconstitutional in Book Sales Case.

By the Associated Press.

White Plains, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The New York fair trade act enacted by the State Legislature as a State substitute for the defunct NRA, was declared unconstitutional by Justice Frederick P. Close in State Supreme Court here today.

The decision was rendered in dismissing an injunction action by Doubleday, Doran & Co., to restrain R. H. Macy & Co., New York department store, from selling Doubleday, Doran books under a stipulated price contracted in accordance with the fair trade act.

Justice Close held that the control of price cutting lay without the jurisdiction of the State Legislature and could be legally authorized only by amendment to the constitution.

He also held the statute invalid on grounds that it authorized the producer of a trade-marked article to control and stipulate price through every medium by which it reaches the consumer.

"Another defect is the attempt to give private persons unlimited powers over the property of others.

"Unless the courts are prepared to hold that by placing his brand upon a commodity, the producer retains a property right to that commodity until it reaches the hand of the consumer, so that he may fix its price at every stage of distribution, this statute must fall.

"A law may be devised to bring about this result, but the defects in this act are so seemingly patent that I must declare it invalid."

Attorneys for Doubleday, Doran & Co., announced they would seek permission to carry the case to the United States Court of Appeals after the method of the Brooklyn Schecter case, through which NRA was invalidated by the United States Supreme Court.

More Arms Money Asked for France

Military Budget Is Fixed at $462,198,000.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 18.—France's military budget for the next year was announced at 6,593,000,000 francs (about $462,198,000) today by Leon Archimbaud, finance committee reporter, who declared the nation needs another billion francs (about $66,000,000) for defense in view of German rearmament.

The Havas news agency quoted Archimbaud as saying a French army of 338,000 men would face a German army of 1,000,000 if war were to break out within the next year.

He said the additional billion francs would be carried by loans with only 50,000,000 francs added to the budget, and asked: "What is 50,000,000 when it is a question of national security?"

Should Germany and France face each other in battle a French army of only about one-third the size of the Reich's could be mustered at once, Havas quoted him as saying, because the entire French overseas force of 213,000 is in service in the colonies.

2 Lost Mercy Fliers Are Found in Mexico

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—Missing since Saturday while on a mercy flight, Arthur E. Johnson, El Paso flier, and Eliseo Hernandez, manager of the Chihuahua City airport, were found alive today in the mountains near Tonichi, Sonora, where they made a forced landing.

They had been unreported since they took off from Chihuahua City to bring back the bodies of Gilberto Ochoa, aviator, and Javier M. Quiroz, Mexican government mine inspector, killed Thursday near Yepachic, Chihuahua, in a plane crash. A Mexican army plane flew today with equipment to repair the damaged landing gear of Johnson's plane, which is expected back in Chihuahua City by late tomorrow.

U. S. Fights to Keep AAA Clear Of Supreme Court Injunction

case, holding there was no basis for the court taking original jurisdiction, contending the Government could not be sued without its consent, and insisting the State of Georgia had received tax-exemption certificates for its full quota of cotton under the law.

Overruling these protests, the court gave the Government until January 20 to submit its answer or motion to dismiss.

Another Test Impends.

This answer gave rise to the question of whether the court will pass on constitutionality of the Bankhead law in another test case scheduled for argument early in December. Lee Moor, a Texas cotton farmer, sued the Texas & New Orleans Railroad for not moving his cotton because it did not have the required exemption certificates. Bringing action in the Supreme Court for an injunction, counsel for Moor is seeking to have the suit decided on constitutional grounds. Entering the case as a "friend of the court," the Government will argue that validity of the law is not necessarily at issue.

If the court, however, should decide to go into the constitutional phases of the case, and rule on either the validity or illegality of the case, the Georgia State case may never go to hearing.

Georgia, the first State to test the legality of New Deal legislation, operates two cotton farms. In briefs filed with the court, Gov. Talmadge's administration said the State could not dispose of its cotton because of its failure to sign the Bankhead agreement, and claimed "irreparable injury and damage." The Government was held to have exceeded its powers in attempting to regulate cotton production through ginning taxes.

"All this constitutes a far-reaching and inclusive scheme and device to absolutely and completely control the production and primary marketing of cotton and the business of growing, marketing and handling cotton within the State in which it is grown, despite the fact that the growing and primary marketing of cotton are not interstate commerce," read the Georgia brief.

Based on Amended Act.

The rice millers' suit for injunction against September rice processing taxes is based on the AAA act as amended last session, while the Hoosac mills case, scheduled for argument December 9, is aimed at the original AAA law.

Last session's AAA amendments barred suits for recovery of processing taxes, unless it could be shown they had not been passed along to producer or consumer. The Southern millers contend it is impossible to determine in the rice industry whether the taxes have been passed along. Unless the Supreme Court enjoins collections, the rice processors say they may be deprived of court recourse.

The case is being closely watched, for if the Supreme Court grants an injunction it may serve as a precedent for other such suits, striking another body blow at already seriously depleted processing tax collections.

In the Government's briefs yesterday on the Hoosac Mills suit, Attorney General Cummings and other Administration lawyers emphasized Congressional power to levy taxes for "the general welfare."

"If in the original (AAA) act Congress exceeded its power to delegate, that is now immaterial because Congress has expressly ratified the assessment and collection of taxes," the Government brief countered.

Other points made by the Government in the Hoosac response were:

That the processing taxes are valid excises, geographically uniform, and not violating the Fifth amendment to the Constitution.

That Congress set up standards for imposition of the levies.

That there was no improper delegation of legislative authority, "and even if there has been, the subsequent ratification by Congress has cured the defect."

That "use of the revenues to make rental and benefit payments to producers, to bring about increased farm income and a resurgence of business activity, by balancing production and consumption, was clearly for the 'general welfare' within the proper meaning of that term."

Meanwhile, the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution was advanced by Government attorneys to support conversion of state members of Federal home loan banks into Federal savings and loan associations, under the home loan act.

Three Milwaukee building and loan associations carried the case to the Supreme Court, after the Wisconsin Supreme Court held such conversions illegal. Arguments before the high court started yesterday, with Horace Russell, general counsel for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, that Congress has supreme power in the field of creating fiscal agencies.

Without regard to State law, Russell held the building and loan associations could come under Federal control as Federal savings and loan associations. Russell was closely questioned by Supreme Court justices. Justice Sutherland said that, granting his contention, Congress could make a bank of a flour milling corporation. Russell said that might be possible, if Congress adhered to its constitutional rights.

Wisconsinites Air Views.

Speaking for the Wisconsin Banking Commission, Joseph P. Brazy and Benjamin Poss insisted Congress could not enlarge the power given by a State to one of its own creations. They contended this would be the same as amending a State statute by an act of Congress.

Justice McReynolds asked Russell where the Government got the power to regulate "thrift."

"You can regulate it if it affects the value of money," Russell replied.

In providing for conversion of State institutions into Federal savings and loan associations, Russell said Congress was undertaking to provide for the stabilization of credit. He said Congress could do this "just as it can take me in the event of a war."

The test of Tennessee Valley Authority validity was set for December 19 argument in response to the Government request to advance hearings on the case. The suit was brought by stockholders of the Alabama Power Co., who questioned the TVA's right to acquire transmission lines for the sale of power to municipalities. TVA stockholders must file their brief by December 2, and the Government by December 16.

Among the decisions handed down yesterday by the Supreme Court were:

A ruling reversing a lower court decision holding unconstitutional the Florida real estate tax moratorium act of 1933, and returning the case to the Southern Florida Federal District Court for further proceedings.

A unanimous opinion upholding regulations of the Oregon Department of Agriculture to govern the shape, dimensions and capacity of raspberry and strawberry baskets used in the State.

U. S. Officials Visit 'American Gibraltar'

Manila, Nov. 18 (AP).—More than a score of officials and commonwealth inaugural visitors today inspected the Island of Corregidor, "the American Gibraltar," at the entrance of Manila Bay.

Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader of the United States Senate, and Joseph W. Byrns, Speaker of the American House of Representatives, were among them.

U. S. Will Name Naval Parley Members Today

By the Associated Press.

Selection by President Roosevelt of America's delegation to the forthcoming London naval conference is expected today in an announcement outlining general plans for participation.

Norman H. Davis, who represented the United States in the preliminary naval talks in London a year ago, conferred with the President nearly an hour yesterday on naval affairs.

As he left the White House, Davis indicated the President would make his announcement today, but declined any further comment.

Informed sources looked for Davis and Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, to be named the chief American delegates. Neither, however, has confirmed the report.

The conference, whose primary purpose is to strive for an agreement to replace the London and Washington naval limitation treaties which expire next year, is scheduled to begin December 6. The American delegation must sail before the end of the month to arrive in time for the opening discussions.

The Japanese delegation of 20 is already on the high seas bound for London.

Standley probably would take two or three technical experts with him. Davis, if named, is expected to recruit his aids from among State Department officials who specialize in naval, Far Eastern and European affairs.

The preliminary naval discussions in London last year ended without any agreement on a formula by which the naval desires and needs of the three chief sea powers might be achieved.

Japan's dissatisfaction with the 5-5-3 ratio limitations placed on the British, American and Japanese navies was emphasized as the discussions drew to a close by formal denunciation of the Washington treaty, effective December 31, 1936. The London pact automatically ends at the same time.

Ethiopian Chief Digs In Behind Italy in North

Ras Seyoum, With 30,000 Men, Awaits Foes Rushed to Oust Him From Post.

By the United Press.

With the Italian Northern Armies, via Asmara, Nov. 18.—Ras Seyoum, elusive Ethiopian northern war lord, popped up today with 30,000 well-armed warriors behind the Italian lines.

Scouts located the Ethiopian force in the eastern Tembien region, approximately 20 miles northwest of Makale and 10 to 15 miles north of the Takkaze River, along which the Italians are endeavoring to consolidate a new forward line.

Three native columns were rushed across the mountains to meet the first serious challenge to Italian occupation in the north. Previous flanking movements have been by guerrilla bands of a few hundred warriors, often armed with barbed spears and old-fashioned muskets.

Intrenched in Mountains.

Ras Seyoum's force was reported intrenched in a mountainous region dominating the surrounding territory. His warriors, equipped with the latest in modern arms, were said to be preparing for action.

As soon as the Askaris have reached positions near the Ethiopian stronghold, tanks and airplanes are expected to be brought into play. After Ras Seyoum's nest has been bombed from the air, squads of flea tanks, followed by the light columns of Askaris, are expected to rush in and attempt to clean out the Ethiopian force.

In Ras Seyoum the Italians have a wily antagonist, versed not only in the traditional savage warfare of the Ethiopians but also acquainted with European tactics. European educated, he is a knight commander of the British Empire.

Encampments Sighted.

He has been hiding in the mountainous north country with which, as Governor of Tigre Province, he is familiar. Italian aviators have sighted encampments believed his off and on at various times during the last few weeks.

How Seyoum moved such a force behind the Italian advanced positions is a mystery and a tribute to his tactical skill.

Seyoum's warlike intentions were confirmed by a native from the district, who said the Ras energetically refused to join Ras Kassa farther south and intends to gamble everything in this peak-dotted territory, where he spent much of his youth.

To Block His Retreat.

The two columns from Makale and the one from Mount Gundi are expected to converge almost 20 miles from Makale on the edge of Tambien and there establish a base for operations against the powerful Ethiopian leader. The base will be slightly south of Seyoum's position, in an attempt to cut off his retreat.

An official announcement said priests of the historic coptic monastery Debra Abbai, founded by the devout Ethiopian Emperor Zire Jacob in 1400, 70 miles southwest of Aksum, voluntarily submitted to Italian authorities today.

The monastery was one of Emperor Haile Selassie's favorite religious charities, containing many priceless relics, some claimed to date from the Queen of Sheba. The population of the surrounding district also submitted. The relics were not molested.

'Tough Guy' Hunts Him

Makale, Ethiopia, Nov. 18 (AP).—Among those in pursuit of Ras Seyoum is a native Ethiopian called "Estoclu," the popular equivalent in this country of "tough guy." Because of his hatred of Ras Seyoum this village leader came to the Italian lines and asked only a chance to fight his foe.

The columns with mounted artillery from Makale and Hauzien started marching to the east into the Tembien region. Officers said they were expecting word of some contact with the elusive Ras Seyoum at any moment.

Gen. Emilio de Bono, who at the age of 70 directed Italian forces in their campaign of conquest, surrendered his command today and left for Rome.

The white-bearded little general placed Gen. Melchiade Gabba, his chief of staff, in charge. De Bono, upon orders of Premier Mussolini, will be succeeded by Marshal Pietro Badoglio.

(Marshal Badoglio announced in Naples he would sail tonight for Africa, accompanied by his two sons, Paola and Mario, aviation and artillery officers, respectively.)

It was announced a band of Gen. Pietro Marvigna's column penetrated the Dadir region while a Blackshirt squadron took up a position at Adda Tzahma. These developments were part of an encircling movement.

The air corps, meanwhile, disclosed that a strong body of Ethiopian troops was at Mai Uazu and Aderat and a long column was marching northward between Enda Micael and Duia, south of Makale. Should this march continue, the Ethiopians would be bound to come into contact with Italian troops guarding the heights of Makale.

British Somalis Reported Slain by Italian Forces

Berbera, British Somaliland, Nov. 18 (Reuters).—Three British Somali tribesmen were killed when Italian native irregulars attacked three Somali villages, it was reported here today.

The advices said the British Somali tribesmen had brought their grazing herds across the border. The incident was termed "minor" because some of the tribes had not returned to British Somaliland from grazing territory in Italian Somaliland despite the government's instructions.

New Puppet Nation for Japan?

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

More than 90,000,000 people soon will find themselves citizens of a "new nation"—North China—a spokesman in Tokyo indicated yesterday. The Provinces of Hopeh, Shantung, Shansi, Chahar and Suiyuan would be virtually independent from China. Other territory controlled by Japan, with dates of acquisition, are marked on the map.

Japan's Aim to Dominate East Is Back of Move to Split China

Army, Believing in Its "Right" to Control Orient, Fears Sino-Soviet Communistic Alliance; Population and Trade Pressure Also Factors.

Miles W. Vaughn, for nine years correspondent in the Far East, covered the Chinese Revolution, the wars which led to establishment of the Independent Empire of Manchukuo under the aegis of the Japanese Army, and the last Japanese invasion of north China three years ago. He explains the reasons for the present north China autonomy movement in the following dispatch.

By Miles W. Vaughn.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

New York, Nov. 18.—The determination of the Japanese army that Japan shall dominate eastern Asia is the prime reason for the demand that an autonomous North China state must be declared by Wednesday.

The army has held this theory of Japan's right to dominate for half a century and for the last 30 years it has moved steadily toward its goal.

Justification for the action is found in these conditions:

1. Japan is the strongest and ablest power in the Orient, the only oriental nation that has been able to maintain its complete independence against European aggression. China, on the other hand, has proved herself incompetent and has been the constant prey of European nations for a century. Since China unquestionably is going to be dominated by some foreign power or group of powers, Japan demands that she shall be that force—at least in the areas of China adjacent to Japanese controlled territory.

2. Communism has been rampant in China for a decade since the late Sun Yat-Sen, leader of the Chinese revolution, invited Soviet advisers to his assistance. Japan will not tolerate a Chinese Communist state, which would be affiliated with Soviet Russia, because a Sino-Soviet combination would be certain shortly to absorb the Japanese empire.

3. The pressure of Japan's rapidly expanding population, which is increasing at the rate of nearly 1,000,000 a year, necessitates the change of Japanese economics from an agricultural to an industrial base. The nation cannot now raise enough to feed itself. Industrialization is hampered because foreign nations have erected prohibitive barriers against Japanese goods. The solution is to control Manchuria and North China, from which Japan can obtain goods and pay for them with manufactured goods.

There are scores of other reasons, including alleged Chinese violation of the dozens of agreements she has made with Japan.

The Japanese hoped that after they had created Manchukuo China would "come to her sense" and agree to give Japan what she wanted. When China did not, the Japanese army said, in effect, "either you'll accede to our demands or we'll eat you."

The eating started with Manchuria and now is spreading to the great north China plain.

The Chinese viewpoint has been equally clear throughout the long struggle.

China always has rejected absolutely the idea of Japanese domination and has fought Japanese aggression, just as she fought British, French, German and Russian aggression. Her policy was to play one foreign power against another.

When the nine-power treaty was signed after the Washington Naval Conference, China felt that her territorial integrity was guaranteed beyond doubt. The treaty, however, failed to restrain the Japanese army in Manchuria and it similarly will fail now to restrain it in north China.

China hardly can hope for European military assistance, as all Europe is nervous with potential military problems on its own doorstep.

A new investigation through the League of Nations, such as that held in Manchuria, might be attempted, but the precedent of the Manchurian case would indicate that little could be hoped for from such a move. The League, too, might attempt to enforce sanctions against Japan, as it is against Italy, because of her "unjustified aggression" in Ethiopia.

The fear of economic pressure, indeed, may be one of the reasons the Japanese are moving more cautiously now than they did in the Manchurian case—and promoting the formation of an "autonomous" north China regime rather than a completely independent one.

Japan Demands That China Split By Tomorrow

ister for Foreign Affairs Mamoru Shigemitsu, and the Nippon Dempo News Agency reported he agreed that China is willing to negotiate directly with Japan with a view of forcing cessation of the anti-Japanese movement, which has been continuous in China for the last six years.

Ting reportedly pledged Nanking to a program of widespread Sino-Japanese co-operation and to further discussion of the relations between China and Manchukuo.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, (Tuesday), Nov. 19.—The declaration of an autonomous North China nation with Japanese protection may be "postponed" until Saturday while leaders of the movement study the reaction of the Chinese government in Nanking, the Rengo (Japanese) News Agency announced today.

The agency previously had announced the new government probably would be proclaimed tomorrow. The Japanese press united in predicting the creation of the new nation during the present week.

In announcing the possible "postponement" of the independence proclamation, the Rengo dispatch said Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, commander of the Peiping-Tientsin garrison, and other leaders of the autonomous movement, desired to wait until they could ascertain the decision of the Nanking government in the situation.

(In Washington the proposed Japanese move was seen as a development of Japanese policy against which the Roosevelt Administration made representations to Tokyo more than a year ago. The State Department, however, withheld comment.)

The five provinces, with a population of approximately 95,000,000 people, apparently would become a "second Manchukuo."

Japanese news agency dispatches said the new state would be named "Huapen Liensheng Tzuchih Chengchuan," or the North China United Provinces Autonomous Regime."

Italians Denied Cattle; Bombs Slay Citizens

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Nov. 18.—The Ethiopian government said tonight Italian airplanes had bombed the civilian population of Enderta, near Makale, leaving a number of persons dead and wounded.

As Emperor Haile Selassie made ready to depart for the northern front, the government asserted the populace of the northern area around Enderta, which the Italians have occupied, had risen against Italian domination, because of resentment over the bombing.

An official announcement said the refusal of the natives to provide cattle and cereals to the Italians without payment had brought on the bombing.

Negus to Depart.

Ethiopia's King of Kings, said an authoritative source, probably will go to the northern front within ten days, after which Ethiopia's forces will brace for their first strong opposition to the Italian invasion.

The capital heard other reports, however, that the Emperor would depart tonight by automobile.

A high authority said Haile Selassie would receive Ras Seyoum, Ras Kassa and Ras Mulugheta, leaders of three Ethiopian armies in the north, beyond Dessye, which is 175 miles northeast of Addis Ababa.

He was expected to review the troops of these three generals, and then move on to the southern front, without visiting the troops of Ras Ayelu, operating in Walkait Province.

Plans for December.

"Real fighting may be expected during the first ten days of December," said a source close to Haile Selassie. This authority asserted the main Eethiopian armies have not yet met the Italians.

Informed quarters denied any important Ethiopian leaders have joined the Italians. They ridiculed a rumor from Asmara, Eritrea, that Ras Kurra, recently reinstated by Haile Selassie after previous conflict with the government, had gone over.

Seven trucks filled with the emperor's baggage started for Dessye today.

The destroyer U. S. S. Manley, of the Special Service Squadron, is en route to the Galapagos Islands, responding to an appeal for emergency medical aid for a member of the crew of the American fishing vessel, Chicken of the Seas.

The Manley sailed from Balboa, Canal Zone, yesterday to meet the fishing vessel and to transport the patient to Balboa. Lieut. Comdr. Edwin D. Gibb is commanding the Manley.

Two Actresses Lose Suits for $650,000

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—The $350,000 damages suit of Sari Fedak, Hungarian actress, against Ernest Vajda, Hollywood playwright, was dismissed today by Superior Judge Robert Kenney on motion of Vajda's lawyers.

A similar motion in behalf of Vilma Aknay, also a Hungarian actress, who sued Vajda for $300,000, was denied. Both actresses brought suit on charges of alleged malicious prosecution for perjury and maintaining a false civil action. They were acquitted of the criminal charges.

Wreck Located.

Brest, France, Nov. 18 (AP).—The captain of the Italian salvage ship Artiglio II returned today from operations off the coast of Ireland and said he had located the wreck of the English freighter Lincolnshire. The Lincolnshire was torpedoed during the World War while carrying 5,000 tons of copper from the United States to France. Its wreckage lies 225 feet deep and the salvage ship will return from Italy in the spring in an effort to recover the copper.

'Never Saw Such a Situation,' Says Luther; Speech Cancelled

U. S. Criticism of Nazi Prosecution of Jews Leads Officials in Germany to State Politics Is No Concern of Other Nations.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, Nov. 18. — Criticism which his Midwestern trip has evoked here moved Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador to the United States, to remark tonight, "I never before have faced such a situation."

Bdsinessmen at New Ulm, Minn., announced cancelation of his engagement to speak there Wednesday and Jewish leaders in Minneapolis sought — unsuccessfully — to have an engagement there tomorrow broken.

The New Ulm group said adverse criticism had caused them to terminate the speaking date.

Considered Affront.

But the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association, of which Herbert J. Miller is president, confirmed the diplomat's engagement to address it tomorrow, though Jewish leaders had presented a petition terming Luther's visit "an affront to all freedom-loving cities."

Dr. Luther, who said his tour was unofficial, retorted "there are some people in the United States who think differently on many things," in declining to reply to a question put him by Fred H. Weinberg, managing editor of the American Jewish World.

Weinberg asked "How do you justify passage of the Nuremberg decrees?"

"You have picked a special case," he told Weinberg.

The Nuremberg decrees deny citizenship to Jews in Germany and bar their intermarriage with Gentiles.

At Madison, Wis., yesterday the envoy denied there had been persecutions of Jews and Catholics in Germany when a group of University of Wisconsin students pressed him for answers to political questions.

Berlin, Nov. 18 (AP).—An official of the foreign office, commenting on reports from the United States that the German Ambassador had undergone sharp questioning by newspapermen because of Nazi policies, said today Germany's internal politics should not concern other nations.

Not Export Goods.

"Our internal political situation should not concern other nations," he said. "Nazi principles are not export goods.

"What others do in comparable situations is not our affair. By like token, our Jewish laws are our consideration alone."

It was learned today that the Nuremberg decrees have aroused foreboding in some foreign diplomats in Berlin.

These diplomats, an informed source said, feel the decrees may involve their nations by cataloguing two types of citizens who might be involved in transgressions while in Germany.

Trade Siege On, Il Duce Talks With Advisers

tions had been expected, reported order prevailed.

A few students and workmen in small groups shouted "down with sanctions!" But carried out no specific reprisals and went home for dinner after they were through with their cheering.

No uniformed Blackshirts appeared in public as the kingdom, with flags flying from housetops, went into the economic trenches against the sanctionist world.

Helmeted soldiers were massed on narrow streets, isolating the quarter where the British embassy and consulate are located. Demonstrations had been expected, but there were none.

Authorities pressed a campaign in many forms for Premier Mussolini's "implacable resistance" to sanctions. Women assembled in various towns to discuss how economies should be effected in every home.

Big business further extended its daylight schedule of work to save light and gas. Although most electricity is made by waterpower, the government is pushing electrification of railroads to save a tremendous amount of coal, all of which is imported.

Flags flew from every building in obedience to the grand council's orders. In Milan and elsewhere, at theaters and concerts, people rose at midnight and cheered the national and Fascist hymns.

Block had an imposing guard. Artillerymen rolled out three ancient light guns from around a nearby military monument, giving an impression they were ready for battle.

Advertising, which slumped badly when most foreign goods fell under a cloud, got at least a temporary stimulant through sanctions. Home producers suddenly found much competition eliminated and bought space to tell about their goods.

Italy has promised reprisals against nations declaring sanctions. The League members are pledged not to buy Italian goods and not to ship here key materials used in the manufacture of munitions or other implements of war.

The Fascist grand council was called into session again tonight to discuss Italy's program of resistance. At a session Satruday night the council denounced sanctions and Il Duce pledged that "all moral energy and material resources" of the nation would be thrown against the economic blockade.

The status of peace negotiations, involving conferences between Mussolini and the British and French ambassadors, also was to be reviewed by the council, authoritative sources said.

Mussolini called this day one of "ignomy and iniquity" for sanctionist nations and ordered that tablets be placed throughout the country recording for history the "enormous injustice" of the League's action.

Italy has been depending upon the United States to furnish the bulk of oil, gasoline, metals and other necessities which the League began withholding today, when the sanctions program took effect.

Officials fear that when the present American neutrality legislation expires in February, Secretary Hull will seek more drastic measures from Congress, making it even more difficult for Italy to obtain materials needed to continue her war in Ethiopia.

An official communique said, "A strong group of Ethiopian warriors were defeated and left on the ground several of their dead" at the confluence of the Mai Weri River with the Takkaze River. (This was about 40 miles south of Aduwa.

Treaty Assures Pay Roll Gains, Wallace's View

Benefits Agriculture as Well, Declares Secretary.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Wallace extolled the new Canadian tariff treaty last night as foreshadowing both increased exports and greater domestic consumption of American farm products.

His formal statement capped a day of grim disagreement over merits of the pact. There was a flood of statements, so voluminous, and in some cases so bitterly worded, as to evoke predictions the treaty might assume proportions of a 1936 campaign issue.

The Cabinet officer, who on Sunday sat beside Mr. Roosevelt as the President explained the trade agreement to the press, predicted from it benefits for "the whole of agriculture" and increased industrial pay rolls as well.

Economists See Gain.

Supplementing Wallace's comment, economists of the Agriculture Department estimated the treaty would go far to offset a loss of $35,000,000 annually in agricultural exports to the neighboring Dominion.

"With the aid of an improved price level," they said, "the new trade agreement should do much to recapture that lost trade."

"The United States always has had a greater volume of trade with Canada than with any other country except the United Kingdom," Wallace's statement said. "This extremely profitable mutual relationship, amounting on the average to over a billion dollars a year, was rudely broken off by our tariff act of 1930 and by the retaliatory Canadian tariff shortly thereafter. It is my opinion that the new trade agreement with Canada is beneficial to all people of the United States, and especially to farmers.

Farm Loss Minimized.

"There are a few farm groups which will fear they are being hurt by the new agreement, but actually in those cases the tariff reductions are moderate and in addtion there are quota restrictions of such a nature that imports from Canada cannot affect the American price structure by more than 1 per cent.

"This small effect in my judgment, will as a rule be more than offset by the increased pay rolls of industries established along the northern border and in the Northeastern States.

"These increased pay rolls will stimulate the demand in the United States for most of the farm products in which there has been a slight reduction in duty.

"I am thoroughly convinced that the Canadian treaty will prove of benefit to the whole of American agriculture, and that no particular branch of farming will be seriously, if at all, disadvantaged."

Florida Not Mollified.

From the lumber industry, the duty on whose product was cut, came the day's sharpest protest and assertions that the treaty threatens to "paralyze the general economy of important parts of the country," that it was a "blow to forest conservation" and "holds a threat of disaster to wage earners in large sections of the industry."

These statesemnts were made by officials of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association. Previous suggestions had been made that they might seek a court test of the reciprocal tariff act, but yesterday no one would say whether such action was in contemplation.

Such a test is very definite in prospect at the hands of the Florida Agricultural Tariff Association. Its representative, A. H. Loomis, said yesterday that the past means "quite an amount of benefit" to Florida fruit producers, but not enough to offset damages done by the reciprocal tariff with Cuba.

Views on Trade Pact Split Industry

Leaders Within Same Groups Differ As to Its Effect.

The President also received a delegation of anthracite coal mine operators from Pennsylvania who left wth him a protest against the increasing importation of Russian anthracite coal. Despite the imposition of a tax of $2 a ton on anthracite coal in 1932 the total coming from Russia had increased, the President was told. He was urged to bar the Soviet products from this country.

Significance was attached to the failure of the organized Republican committees to assail the Canadian pact at the first opportunity. No comment on the agreement was forthcoming at either the Republican national committee headquarters or at the offices of the Republican congressional campaign committee.

Reasons for Silence.

It was generally believed that the Republicans as a national party, even though historically a protective tariff party, would find it difficult to formulate a policy on the question of the Canadian pact and trade reciprocity in general. Both operate as a double-edged knife, hurting some sections of the country and helping others, it was pointed out.

Moreover, the Republicans feel that the reaction of the American consumer is an important factor. Before attacking the trade pact Republican leaders want to ascertain how the consumer feels about it. Still another reason for the official Republican silence was that many Republicans—for instance, those in the automobile industry and in financial circles—no longer worship at the altar of high tariff protection.

Word was received here, however, that Senate Republican Leader Charles L. McNary was preparing to hurry from his Oregon home to the Capital to protest against the reduction in the tariffs on lumber. But his opposition was viewed more as a local matter than one affecting Nation-wide party principles.

The Associated Press reported that Frank Knox, Chicago aspirant for the Republican Presidential nomination, speaking at Indianapolis, "predicted that the Canadian agreement 'would outrage' the dairy States of Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and northern Illinois through its provision cutting in half the butter tariff." The dispatch also quoted him as saying "lumbermen of those States also will be adversely affected."

The American tariff on butter was not reduced by the pact, although the Canadians reduced their duty on our butter from 14 to 12 cents a pound. Mr. Knox probably had in mind the reduction in the American tariff on cream from 56.6 cents a gallon to 35 cents, subject to an annual quota of 1,500,000 gallons.

Opinions Conflict.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, came to the defense of the pact, asserting that "one would scarcely expect any adverse effect" of the reductions in duty on live cattle, especially in view of the small percentage that the Canadians are allowed to send here at the reduced rates.

He pointed out that in exchange on this country's concessions, Canada made concessions on wool, petroleum and tallow and has agreed to keep hides on the free list—all of benefit to the West.

Underwood & Underwood.

FRANCIS B. SAYRE, who will defend tariff treaties today.

Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, termed the pact "a step in the right direction." Representative Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), of Maine, asserted the reduction in the tariff on seed potatoes was the "violation of a promise" made by the President to Maine potato interests. The tariff on potatoes for consumption was not changed. Representative Ralph E. Church (Republican), of Illinois, assailed the reductions in general.

Aside from these scattering remarks members of Congress and other political leaders were silent. The controversy, however, was carried on with avidity by the Administration, agricultural groups and the lobbyists.

Dill Joins Attack.

Former Senator C. C. Dill (Democrat), of Washington, termed the pact "one sided in favor of Canada," because it opens up a trading market of 130,000,000 people in this country to the Canadians in exchange for concessions in a market of 10,000,000 people. In addition, he held, the concessions given Canada by the United States would be taken advantage of by other nations.

Asserting that the pact made the Pacific northwest "a sacrificial lamb on an alter called reciprocity," Mr. Dill in a formal statement asserted:

"It is mighty poor business for our Government to appropriate billions of dollars to employ the idle, and then by reducing tariffs on those things of which we can produce vast surpluses, destroy the natural employment which such production of our own necessities would afford.

"The reduction of the tariff on lumber of the far Northwest is a concrete and definite example. The application of the reduction of the tariff from $4 to $2 to a quota of 250,000,000 feet of Northwest fir and hemlock, means that this treaty transfers 4,000,000 man hours from the high-paid labor in the States of Oregon and Washington to the low-paid labor of British Columbia."

Lumberman Protests.

Wilson Compton, manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, was even sharper in his criticism of the lumber reductions in the pact. He held that "glittering phrases about stimulating 'sound and healthy trade' do not conceal the fact that in the trade treaty with Canada the forest products industries and their employes have been sacrificed for promised benefits to other industries or other interests regarded as more 'deserving.'"

He called the 50 per cent reduction in the lumber duties a stunning blow not only to the promising tide of recovery in the forest products industries but also to the tens of thousands of employes awaiting an opportunity for re-employment.

"To describe as an act of good neighborliness a transaction which deliberately sacrifices one industry and those dependent on it for livelihood for the benefit of other industries is lacking in candor," Mr. Compton asserted. "Good neighborliness at home, although perhaps less spectacular, is just as important as good neighborliness abroad.

"The tens of thousands of persons who are dependent for a livelihood upon the lumber and timber products industries which heretofore have been vigorously seeking to maintain the higher wage and labor standards, conservation progress and security of employment urged upon them by the Government, are dumbfounded by this evidence of the willingness of the Government, through use of its discretionary powers under the trade agreements act, to deprive those industries of the principal protection for these higher industrial standards. The force of the blow is not lessened by the obvious fact that these industries have been sacrificed for concessions alleged to be of greater value to other groups ambitious for further extensions of their products into foreign markets.

Cream Rate Analyzed.

Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Co-operative Milk Producers Federation, issued a factual statement which contended that 1,500,000 gallons of cream is equivalent to 6,000,000 pounds of butter and that, applying the reduction of the cream tariff to the butter tariff of 14 cents, "this is equivalent to permitting the importation of 6,000,000 pounds of butter on a 9-cent tariff."

If the Canadian cream can meet American sanitary standards, he pointed out, it can be used either in its fresh form or can be made into butter.

"If in its fresh form," he continued, "it will displace equivalent quantities of Middle-Western cream now finding Eastern market outlets. In turn, the Middle-Western cream supplies will back up into butter stocks and increase the butter surplus of this country. If made into butter, the same effect upon the butter stocks will be had."

"Reduction of the Canadian duty on butter from 14 cents to 12 cents per pound," he asserted, "will very likely not assist American dairy farmers, since the comparative prices of butter at New York and at Montreal show a range in favor of New York prices of sometimes as high as 11 cents per pound.

"As late as last spring, the New York price was more than 8 cents higher than the Montreal price for the same type of butter. Also, Canada operates under the British Dominion tariff preference system with New Zealand and Australia, under which butter from these countries could at all times be imported by Canada at prices lower than American exporters could afford to sell."

Grangers Indignant.

Severe criticism of the trade agreement also was expressed at the National Grange meeting in annual convention at Sacramento, Calif., prior to adoption of a committee report calling for rescinding of the treaty or repeal of the reciprocal tariff act, according to the Associated Press. It was called a "slap in the face to American agriculture" by C. C. Cogswell, Kansas agricultural leader, and as a "step which will deprive the farmer of markets which should be his," by James C. Farmer, New Hampshire vegetable and poultry producer.

The report of the legislative committee predicted that the treaty will "prove injurious rather than beneficial."

"We already have a domestic surplus of practically every agricultural commodity on which tariff concessions have been made to Canada," it continued. "Foreign imports cannot fail to add to these surpluses and depress the domestic price level on farm commodities."

Minister Views Treaty as Tie Of Friendship

By the Associated Press.

Toronto Nov. 18.—Norman Armour, United States Minister to Canada, said today the new Canadian-American trade treaty would further friendly relations between the two nations.

Addressing the Canadian Club, Armour said:

"Far more significant than the fact of the treaty itself was the evidence of sincere friendship and cordiality present as representatives of the two countries completed the signature."

He declared Canadians and Americans were mutually proud of their friendship and neighborliness, and asserted the American public generally had "need for a greater understanding of Canada."

Cattlemen Pleased.

Canadian cattlemen were happy over the conclusion of the pact, which they said would give an outlet for many Canadian cattle.

Lumbermen saw in the treaty the prospect of increased employment in the lumber industry.

Canadian distillers, who hold 30,000,000 gallons of whisky which is more than four years old, envisioned a new market for their product, as the result of a 50 per cent cut in the tariff on this type of liquor.

Magazine publishers, however, were pessimistic, because of the provision allowing American magazines to enter Canada without duty.

Competition Feared.

Manufacturers of automobiles, radios, farm implements, electric refrigerators and other articles believed they would suffer from United States competition.

Merchants of border cities and towns awaited definition of the "tourists" permitted under the treaty to bring back $100 worth of goods duty-free from the United States. They were of the opinion border residents making daily trips over the line or tourists visiting the United States for one day would not be privileged under the clause.

Sir Thomas White, former Minister of France, said "the lowering of United States tariffs on lumber, fish, agricultural products and other commodities should prove of material advantage to Canadian primary producers."

Higher Meat Foreseen.

J. S. McLean, president of Canadian Packers, Ltd., declared he foresaw "more expensive meat for Canadian consumers because cattle prices will go up."

Col. Harry Cockshutt, president of Cockshutt Plow Co., said at Brantford the treaty would not increase industrial production for home consumption and would not help employment.

H. A. Brown, vice president and general manager of General Motors of Canada, at Oshawa, said customs experts of leading Canadian manufacturers of automobiles would meet at Toronto today to discuss the situation. H. J. Carmichael, of the St. Catherines plant of General Motors, believed tariff revisions "may mean curtailed production."

Fish exporters in the maritime provinces were disappointed to learn there was no reduction on Canadian haddock and cod exported to the United States, pointing out these were the chief exports from maritime fisheries.

Other Exporters Pleased.

On the other hand at Edmonton satisfaction was expressed at a reduction of one-quarter cent per pound on Canadian whitefish exports.

The Canadian textile industry will have to make closer prices because of the tariff reductions in colored textile goods, said R. C. Tolmie, general manager of Canadian Cottons Co., at Montreal.

At Quebec Hon. Gerard Power said the treaty was an "absolute boon to the Quebec and maritime lumber industry," a view echoed by lumbermen in Ontario and the West.

Ontario fruit growers find the new tariffs attractive, said Earl J. Marsh, of Niagara Packers at Grimsby. His firm will benefit in shipment of cherries to Michigan and New York.

H. B. Clemens, of Toronto, general manager of the United Farmers of Ontario, said the new agreement was "a great thing for the cattle growers."

'Bible's Oldest Part' Is Found in London

London, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—What was described officially as the oldest manuscript of any part of the Bible in any language was found today in an old collection of papyri in the Rylands Library at Manchester.

It consists of part of the Greek manuscript of the Gospel of St. John, written 200 years before the Codex Sinaiticus.

The document was lost for centuries in a rubbish heap of Egyptian material in the library.

"It probably was written before the ink of the original dried in the early part of the second century," said Henry Cuppy, librarian, "or even in the last part of the first century. Hitherto scholars thought St. John's Gospel was one of the last written. This proves it was one of the first."

The Codex Sinaiticus, a fourth century manuscript, purchased from Russia by the British Museum in 1933, with the Codex Vaticanus, is regarded as final authority on the true text of the Bible.

The newly found manuscript contains verses from the eighteenth chapter of St. John, dealing with Jesus Christ before Pontius Pilate.

breaking her damn neck.' Then I heard Edith say 'Pappy, don't you be cutting me with that butcher knife.' And I went out to the other room. He had her by the hair of the head and they was a-yelling. Trigg backs Edith against the wall and she picks up a shoe and hits him with it. He was a-bleeding all right. I says 'Trigg, are you hurt much?' He says 'I ain't hurt, I'd pay a hospital bill if I was.'"

On and on went her stark recital while Edith ripped the perky brown hat off her black hair and twisted nervously at the defense table. Mrs. Maxwell told of taking Trigg's clothes off and getting him in bed, and then how he got up for a drink of water and fell. An hour later he was dead.

The commonwealth said it would prove that Edith used an electric iron as a weapon, but that proof never came. Instead, Dr. T. J. Tudor, who conducted the autopsy, the worst wound was three-quarters of an inch long—the exact size of the heel of the brown shoe that was displayed in court.

Tomorrow Edith will testify.

It was a strange scene in which to hold a murder trial.

Through the window came a sad song, sung by a guitar-plucking ballad singer outside; babies who had been carried down the trails in their mothers' arms fretted and wailed in protest against the suffocating air; Judge H. A. W. Skeen left the bench and sat beside the witness chair because he is 76 and deaf.

In his opening statement, A. A. Skeen, chief of defense counsel, contended the girl fought in self-defense that night—fighting a man maddened by alcohol and the belief that his daughter was disgracing him.

"Trigg Maxwell was crazed with strong drink that night," Skeen shouted. "He may have been drinking only beer, but it was beer charged with cheap alcohol and it steals away reason from the mind."

It took 30 minutes to get a jury which consisted entirely of men, because women are still considered not quite equal to men here.

N. Y. Appeals Court Gets Vanderbilt Fight

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—The now famous legal fight for the custody of 11-year-old Gloria Laura Morgan Vanderbilt officially came today to New York State's highest tribunal, the court of appeals.

The court acknowledged receipt of a motion by the child's mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, for permission to appeal from rulings giving custody to little Gloria's paternal aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. The court set no date for the argument, but it is likely it will take place within the next two or three weeks.

Denver, Nov. 18 (AP).—"Love intoxication" appeared in the lexicon of the Colorado Supreme Court today. The court upheld a $2,000 damage award to a girl who said the driver of an automobile in which she was riding was kissing another girl just before the crash occurred. "If his mental processes were blurred due to his love-making, he must be held to the same responsibility as one who voluntarily becomes intoxicated," said Justice Haslett P. Burke.

Mayors to Ask Permanent Aid By U. S. Works

criticism was aimed largely at delay in the Public Works Administration programm. The deadlock between PWA and WPA, he explained, was caused principally because most cities tried to "slip in everything" under WPA to avoid paying a large proportion of the cost of local projects.

Unnecessary "red tape" was blamed by the New York Mayor for much of the PWA delay.

"I submit," he said, "that it is an entirely unnecessary loss of time to take the plans and specifications of experienced city engineers and submit them to younger, inexperienced subordinate engineers in Washington for approval. It just doesn't make sense."

"Semicolon Boys."

He said that no city objects to Washington supervising projects financed 100 per cent by the Government, but that local people know more about their own works "than a State administration living hundreds of miles away." The only necessary Federal check-up, he said, on projects for which municipalities issue bonds to meet part of the cost should concern the credit of the city and the value of the project.

"Semicolon boys" in Washington were blamed by LaGuardia for most of the relief troubles.

"The semicolon boys," he said, "are simply a boil on the neck of this Administration. They are the fellows, you know, who, after they have been graduated from some law school, get jobs here, and then sit down and look for semicolons and hold up the works. They have not contributed a single thing and yet they are one of the causes of the delay in a great deal of the important work in the relief program."

The New York Mayor said that any idea that the Federal program can end next July "is simply unthinkable and impossible."

"The problem is ours," he said, "and we are right up with it. You cannot feed people on statistics or ticker tape. Assuming that we have complete recovery, we will still be confronted with a new normal.

Sees Permanent Problem.

"With technological displacement, with labor-saving devices in agriculture as well as in industry, we must be prepared to meet this new normal, which means that with a complete recovery of business and industry we will still have several million men and women unable to find gainful, permanent employment."

LaGuardia said that while States and cities could help, they cannot be expected to carry the whole burden. He urged that the mayors submit for the benefit of Congress an estimate of their needs during the next fiscal year.

The New York mayor condemned any housing plan that would contemplate taking industries into so-called satellite communities. He said the only reason why industry would move to such communities would be to find cheap labor and that this would lower the general standard.

Telling of his experience on the allotment board, LaGuardia said that at one time "for a few days" an interest rate of 3 per cent was obtained on municipal loans. He said President Roosevelt and Secretaries Morgenthau and Ickes approved.

"Then," he added, "some little semicolon boy started at a conference at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury that this would injure private capital, and the interest rate went back to 4 per cent."

Asked about the statement later, Secretary Morgenthau remarked "LaGuardia makes a good speech."

Reverting again to Government red tape, LaGuardia told the other mayors that "when the typewriters stop the steam shovels can begin."

At a luncheon meeting, the mayors heard Attorney General Cummings describe informally the crime prevention and detection work of the Department of Justice.

Pact Views Take Wide Range; Called 'Wise Step,' 'Monstrous'

Opinions Differ Among Leaders in the Same Industries; Motor Manufacturers and Fruit Shippers Pleased.

By the Associated Press.

The United States-Canadian trade treaty, lowering tariffs on some farm products, evoked a wide range of comments in the agricultural west yesterday. Some of the comments follow:

R. A. Trovatten, Minnesota commissioner of agriculture: "It doesn't seem wise to open the gates to imports of more farm products."

E. A. Cudahy, sr., chairman Cudahy Packing Co.; President Roosevelt has taken a step in the right direction. We must buy if we expect to sell."

Milo Reno, president National Farm Holiday Association: "Any such treaty is made in the interests of industry and international bankers and not in the interests of the farmers."

"Monstrous," Says McKelvie.

S. R. McKelvie, member Hoover Farm Board: "The treaty is monstrous, and if carried out will mean a reduction of $1 to $3 per hundredweight for cattle."

W. M. Tomhave, president Aberdeen-Angus Breeders Association: "It certainly will not help the beef interests."

R. H. Cabell, president Armour & Co.: "It will tend to benefit the consumer of meat and dairy products, but probably will have little effect at the moment on producers of these products because our current production is abnormally low. If the United States livestock population is restored to normal, the treaty will tend to burden our producers."

P. C. Miller, head of potato division, American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers Association: "It is not a good thing for potato growers."

Called Favor to East.

D. R. Whitaker, Wyoming Stock Brokers Association: "President Roosevelt has negotiated a treaty which favors Eastern manufacturing interests at the expense of the western livestock industry."

E. E. King, master, Washington State Grange: "Keep the American market for the American farmer. I advocate termination of all reciprocal trade agreements'."

J. A. Shoemaker, president Denver Union Stockyards: "The treaty is unsatisfactory but likely will have no great effect on the cattle industry."

F. E. Mollin, secretary of the American National Livestock Association, said he feared the treaty would prompt South American countries to seek similar agreements.

J. P. Case, president of the Pure Milk Association, representing Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin dairy farmers, said the pact would injure the dairy industry seriously.

C. L. Hill, head of the Wisconsin department of agriculture, expressed fear the tariff slash on cheddar cheese would force a cent a pound reduction in producers' prices. He said five-sixths of the Wisconsin production is of the cheddar variety.

Cheese Competition Seen.

Walter Singler, president of the Wisconsin Co-operative Milk Pool, said that with cheese at 17½ cents top, Canadians were not likely to enter competition with Wisconsin cheese makers but, if the market went up, Canada would compete, especially in the Eastern market.

The Spokane (Wash.) Chamber of Commerce, holding the pact opened a "new trade frontier," perceived good opportunities in the treaty and named a committee to study possibilities of profiting from it. President J. I. Kinman said it presented a favorable trade relation with Canada for the fruit and machinery industries of that vicinity.

George Sehlmeyer, master, California Grange: "It appears this treaty will result in increasing the difficulties of American agriculture."

William Hirth, president, Missouri Farmers Association and once chairman of the corn belt committee: "It will mean much to our manufacturers and stands out as a truly constructive achievement of the Roosevelt administration. If within the next year or two there is a real Canadian business revival they will need to import a good many of our food products. It is to be hoped this agreement will break the ice for similar agreements with other nations."

Labor Leader Opposes.

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, said, "Labor believes in tariffs that will keep out of the country the products of countries with cheap labor. We should protect our people and our standard of living. We can produce everything we need."

Silas H. Strawn, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, said, "The treaty might be a good thing or bad. I am not prepared to pass judgment on the treaty without a careful study."

Alfred Smart, secretary-treasurer of the Esquire Publishing Co., said the American magazine industry would benefit tremendously from removal of the duty on such publications.

B. W. Snow, crop statistician, said "Indirectly our domestic grains are affected by the lowering of the duty upon Canadian whiskies, which, of course, will have some result in decreasing our domestic distillation from grains."

R. W. Bell, of the grain firm of Lamson Brothers & Co., said, "Apparently there are no provisions in the treaty applicable to grains that are of a price determining influence on Canadian or United States wheat prices. Increased export sales of Canadian wheat would be very helpful to price levels."

State Senator Ed Peirce, of Washington, predicted a tariff reduction would help soft fruit exports to Canada.

Steel executives at Youngstown, Ohio, asserted decreases in Canadian tariffs would be of little help to them.

Charles H. Cook, manager of North Pacific Grain Growers, Inc., said wheat provisions of the new treaty were satisfactory.

In Washington State cedar shingle manufacturers considered limitation of Canadian shingle imports to 25 per cent of American consumption a victory.

F. M. Rothrock, stockyards manager of Spokane, said the cattle provisions would be a disrupting blow despite the restriction on the number.

E. H. Jones, Vermont State commissioner of agriculture, said the agreement will mean "inestimable loss to Vermont agriculture."

James P. Mooney, president of the American Manufacturers Export Association: "There is not the slightest doubt that it will stimulate trade between the two nations," and that "even the people who think they will be hurt will benefit."

W. S. Moscrip, president of the Twin City Milk Producers Association: "It will make every American dairy farmer feel he has been betrayed by the Administration."

J. G. Geddes, vice president of the National City Bank, Cleveland: "The outstanding achievement of the Roosevelt Administration."

Loring Probers Seek Samples Of Handwriting

Will Compare Them With Fragments Found on Bloodstained Paper.

All persons thought to have any possible connection with the Corinna Loring murder will be asked to give samples of their handwriting, it was announced last night at Upper Marlboro.

One man, it was said, already has submitted a sample.

This and the others are to be compared with the writing on a piece of blood-stained note paper found near Corinna's body on Saddleback Ridge in Mount Rainier a week ago last Saturday.

Robert W. Hicks, Washington criminologist, made a report on this bit of evidence to Lieut. Detective Joseph H. Itzel last night. The dark smudges on the paper, he said, were made by blood, but no fingerprints were distinguishable. Apparently, Hicks said, the person handling the paper wore gloves.

Part of a Word Appears.

Part of a word appears on the paper, and under it several numbers and fractions. The fragment is "arith"—apparently an abbreviation of arithmetic.

Some persons who have followed the investigation closely believe much of what has been called "evidence" has no relation to the case. The spot where the body was found, they point out, is a sort of unofficial dump, and until the souvenir hunters arrived was littered with cans, bottles and scraps of papers.

Police yesterday were checking on a trip that Corinna Loring, murdered bride-to-be, had a "secret sweetheart" last spring—a man whom she invariably met some distance from her home in Mount Rainier.

The story was told to Mr. and Mrs. George Loring, parents of the murdered girl, by a neighbor. Lieut. Itzel plans to talk to this neighbor at her home.

According to the story, the man had five or six dates with Corinna. He would park his sedan about 150 feet from the Loring bungalow and Corinna would join him there. The man was about 35 years old and always was hatless.

The Loring family knew of no such man. Neither did Richard Tear, 29-year-old St. Elizabeth's Hospital attendant, who was engaged to marry Corinna November 6, two days after she disappeared. Tear met Corinna in the summer.

Police also were running down a report that a man employed in the Washington Navy Yard appeared at work the day after the murder with his face badly scratched. Three or four days later, according to the report, the man quit his job and disappeared.

It was suggested that this man and the man mentioned by the Loring neighbor might be the same one.

State's Attorney Alan Bowie said last night that he had the name of the former Navy Yard worker. An investigation would be made, he said, to determine whether the man was fired or simply gave up his job.

The individual heretofore alluded to as a "resident of Prince Georges County," for whom police searched for four days, is now in St. Elizabeths Hospital, it was learned last night.

He entered the case when he called on a lawyer and said he knew a lot about the Loring murder. However, he also said some things that convinced police he was insane.

Another suspect went to Upper Marlboro last night to clear himself. He had sent a suit with blood stains to a Mount Rainier cleaning establishment and somebody told police. His alibi, however, was satisfactory.

Diary Is Useless.

Lieut. Itzel said yesterday that he was in possession of Corinna's diary and all the correspondence found in her stenographic office and her home. The last entry in the diary was in 1931, he said, and none of its contents had any possible bearing on the murder.

The town council of Mount Rainier last night postponed action on the posting of a reward for Corinna's murderer. The reward was suggested by Mayor Norman A. Pruitt.

Besides considering a reward, the town council debated two other suggestions growing out of the murder. One was that a light be erected at the entrance to Saddleback Ridge, where the girl's body was discovered, and the other that the ridge, mockingly referred to as "Lovers Lane," be barricaded. No action was taken on either.

Lieut. Itzel announced last night that he would again talk to Mrs. Loring today.

"I haven't found any discrepancy in her story," he said. "I simply want her to give me more details on certain subjects."

There were indications that the Washington police were going to co-operate with Lieut. Itzel in trying to solve the murder mystery. Itzel visited the local detective bureau and conferred with Detective Sergt. John Dalglish, of the homicide squad, and Lieut. John Fowler, ballistics expert.

Dalglish said he furnished Itzel with some information that might prove valuable.

Resuming his inquiry at Upper Marlboro yesterday, Itzel talked to two men, one a Washington cab driver and the other a former "sweetheart" of Corinna Loring.

Jack Edwards, the cab driver, who lives at 11½ Fourth street southeast, told of picking up a woman in his taxicab in downtown Washington between the time Corinna disappeared and the time her body was discovered.

The woman rode to Fifth and L streets northeast, the driver said, and there met a man who has figured in the Loring investigation.

Daniel Kohr, 1900 block Jackson street northeast, told Itzel he had been an admirer of Corinna Loring but that he had not been out with her for more than a year. The only time he had seen her since then, he said, was on a street car.

Strangled to Death.

Dr. Oscar La Vine, who performed the autopsy on Corinna after her body was found on Saddleback Ridge in Mount Rainier, submitted a report to Itzel on his findings.

His conclusions were:

That Corinna died of strangulation.

That she suffered a sever concussion, but that this was a secondary factor in the death.

From every indication, Dr. La Vine reported, the body was dragged to the spot where it was found. Contrary to reports, he said, no pieces of flesh were found under her fingernails. On the contrary, he said, the nails were "polished and in no way scarred."

Other Findings Given.

Other findings in the report were:

Corinna's coat was buttoned "snugly" around her. The clothes were not ruffled, although the dress was pulled up to the knees.

There were scars and bruises on the ring finger of her left hand and on the back of her left hand. There was a deep gash between the ring finger and little finger of the right hand. She wore a high school class ring on the right hand.

The girl had not been criminally assaulted.

Murder in the Capital

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Who was the slayer of quiet Corinna Loring, almost on the eve of her bridal day?

As ace detectives seek to unravel this ghastly crime, The Washington Post has been delving into the histories of unsolved murders in and around the District.

Karl Schriftgiesser has been assigned to write these true tales of slayings unsolved, some committed many years ago. The third of his series, "Murder in the Capital," appears this morning.

The weird murder of Mrs. Ada G. Dennis, fashionable dressmaker and seamstress for Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, back in 1901, in her house on K street, is Mr. Schriftgiesser's theme today. Details of this eerie crime at the turn of the century follow.

Mary Doyle was restless. Outside rain beat down on a tin roof and a December wind howled through the early morning. The horses in Harrell's stable on L street could be heard stamping and whinnying away up in her back bedroom in the rooming house on K street where she tossed in her bed. She was beginning to doze when a terrifying shriek lifted itself over the moans of the trees, the whinnyings of the horses. She sat upright in her bed, jumped out, peered into the uneasy dawn. It lacked a few minutes of 4 o'clock.

Outside she heard men running and saw they were policemen. "Just some family quarrel," she sighed, and sought the warmth of her bed. She heard John Goss, a newspaperman who roomed in the same house, enter the front door, sensed him turning off the light as usual, and heard him go to his front room on the third floor.

In doing so he passed the second floor, all of which was devoted to the workshop of Mrs. Ada G. Dennis, fashionable dressmaker and seamstress for Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, wife of the President. Mary Doyle dozed off after that only to be awakened by moans coming from the lower floor. She was disturbed. She got up and sought the newspaperman. Together they traced their way to the source of the sounds, the lower back room where Mrs. Dennis slept.

"Are you ill, Ada?" Mary Doyle asked.

"Is that you, Mary?" came a tremulous inquiry in response.

"Open the door so we can help you, Ada," Mary Doyle urged, but the only answer this time was a deep, agonized moan and silence.

Doors Locked From Inside.

When Goss and other men roomers at the house broke down the door after finding that every window and both doors leading to the room were locked from the inside they found the unconscious Ada Dennis in her bed. Her head had been beaten as if by a giant wielding a sledge hammer. Her left arm was broken. The bed was soaked with her blood.

That was in the morning of December 10, 1901. To this day the murder never definitely has been solved. But that morning it was not yet murder, for Mrs. Dennis was alive when they took her to the hospital.

A doctor questioned her with a patrolman standing by.

"Do you know who I am?" he asked.

"Yes," she gasped.

"The police are here and they want to know who struck you."

"Never mind that now," and unconsciousness eased her pains.

Detectives carefully surveyed the premises, after questioning Policemen Livingstone and Henderson and Inspector Matthews, who had heard the scream and scoured the neighborhood without seeing a soul. They found $200 in plain sight, eliminating robbery as the motive. They found a gun at the end of a trail of blood, as if Mrs. Dennis in her desperate struggle had tried to reach it in its partly open drawer. They found a broken statue of a horse, blood smeared, that they thought was the weapon, and then they found a leg which had been unscrewed from a piano stool, dripping blood and with human hair adhering to it. A towel had been wrapped around the statue, or tossed upon it after the attacker had wiped his hands. Police said the stool leg was the weapon.

A window in an adjacent room was partly open. Nearby a flower pot was overturned and broken. But every entrance to the room was locked when Goss and his fellow roomer forced their way in by shoulder strength. Police could find no way by which the room could have been entered.

They hid a detective behind a screen in Mrs. Dennis' hospital room, hoping that she might name the person who had beaten her. Mrs. Dennis was a widow, whose dressmaking business flourished because of White House patronage, and as she lay there Mrs. Roosevelt came to see her often.

Detectives could find no enemies of this woefully wounded woman. They could find no man who might have had reason for the attack. The hidden detective heard her scream once, "It's a woman! It's a woman!" but the police could find no hint of a jealous woman who might have entered that securely locked room.

But in a sewer not far from the Dennis home police found a red-stained coat. A chemist took it and said it had been soaked with the blood of a cat.

One night Mrs. Dennis arose in her bed, her eyes stricken with terror.

"My God," she shrieked, "I didn't think God made men like you!"

She was beating off her assailant in her delirium, fending off cruel blows from her assailant who was not there.

Meanwhile detectives worked on the baffling case. They found a young man who had seen a stranger skulking near the house, a hat pulled low across his face. But he could give no further description. Police arrested Richard Cole, porter at the rooming house, and he produced an alibi, so they let him go. And so the police, up against the proverbial stone wall, bided their time, and Mrs. Dennis alternately lay peacefully or screamed terrifyingly in her hospital room. It took the police of rural Gainesville, Tex., to reopen the case.

Similar Crime in 1887.

They saw, in newspaper accounts, a parallel to a similar crime that had happened there in 1887. Two girls, sleeping together, had been murdered without any apparent motive by an unknown assailant who beat in their skulls with a hatchet. Police had arrested a young man named Samuel Preston but he had been exonerated. He left Gainesville and went to Washington to live.

While police, rather hopelessly, were trying to connect the murders of 1887 with the assault of 1901, Mrs. Dennis began to recover. After she had gained enough strength detectives came to question her. Chief Richard Sylvester asked:

"Do you know who it was who struck you?"

"Yes," she said, feebly.

"Now, Mrs. Dennis," urged the officer gently, "won't you tell us who it was?"

It was as if the officer had turned back time to that December morning. Her voice rose to a shriek.

"It was . . ." but she did not say who it was.

"Take him away. Take him away."

Not that time nor ever did she speak the name.

She lived for months.

Fends Blows in Nightmare.

Police did not dare question her again. But one morning—the hour was 4 and it was windy and the rain was falling—nurses and internes leaped to their feet, sped to the room.

"Stop him! He's hitting me again. Stop him!"

There was nobody there but the dying woman.

She was fending death-dealing blows in her nightmare, screaming.

"Take him away!"

"Take who away?" said a nurse.

"Him! There he is!"

She pointed to a space in the bare hospital wall, bare to the nurses, horror-scarred to her.

"Have him arrested. He's the one who did it. His name is——."

The death rattle choked her throat and she died with the name she never had spoken struggling to come from her lips.

But there is another chapter. Perhaps it should be called "Strange Interlude," or perhaps it should be called "Solution to a Crime."

It is written briefly in the musty files at Police Headquarters. The date is December 16, 1901, just six days after Mrs. Dennis awoke in terror to see the fiend she never named leaning over her bed. It is a case of suicide of a man who inhaled illuminating gas in an apartment house not far from Mrs. Dennis' home.

Note Attached to Report.

To the brief report there is attached a note, which reads:

"Have body cremated. Send ashes home and bury in the family plot at New Hope. Some say I am crazy; but if I am not sane now, I was never sane. Alcohol is the child of misery, the mother of crime. Possibly there is a place called hell where devils are. A hell whose followers are men like me.

"But I am pleased to say there is no proof.

"So also there may be a place called heaven, the home of God, where angels are and play beautiful music and listen to the groans and shrieks of the lost in hell.

"There is no evidence."

The note is signed:

"Samuel Preston."

It was between the lodgings of Mrs. Dennis and the house where Preston lived that the police found the coat—stained with the blood of a cat.

Final Report Exonerates H. H. Rogers 3d in Actress' Death.

By the United Press.

West Chester, Pa., Nov. 18.—Evelyn Hoey, musical comedy actress, who was found shot to death in the farm home of Henry H. Rogers 3d, last September 11, committed suicide, the Chester County grand jury reported today.

The report of the jury said, in part:

"The grand jury unanimously decides that Evelyn Hoey came to her death by committing suicide with a revolver by shooting herself through the head."

Frank B. Henderson, foreman, and Earl T. Lefevre, secretary of the December grand jury, which had been called into extraordinary session, signed the report which was made to Judge W. Butler Windle.

Exonerates Rogers.

The verdict was a complete exoneration for Rogers, son of the late oil king, and his house guest, William J. Kelly, motion-picture cameraman, who were arrested and held on technical charges of suspicion of murder. They were released, after a coroner's jury returned an "open verdict," saying that Miss Hoey died at the hands of a person or persons unknown."

Following the coroner's inquest, District Attorney William E. Parke asked for a grand jury investigation of all circumstances surrounding Miss Hoey's death, and also asked that the grand jury investigate conduct of certain members of the coroner's jury.

The actress, a bullet wound in her head, was found lying on the floor of Rogers' bedroom in his farm home near Downingtown. Subsequently questioning by officials revealed that Miss Hoey, Rogers and Kelly had been drinking, and that Rogers and the actress had quarreled.

Girl Was Melancholy.

Roth Rogers and Kelly maintained they were sitting in the living room when the shot was heard from upstirs. Their testimony was corroborated by Cloud Battin, a farm worker who had gone to Rogers' home to ask him regarding allegedly overdue wages.

It was believed at first that Miss Hoey was despondent because Rogers had lost interest in her, but further testimony and statements by witnesses indicated that the actress had mentioned suicide in 1934 because of unrequited love for a New York producer, whose name was not revealed.

Redhead Goes Brunette, Leaves Jail as Blonde

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Mrs. Lillian Markoff, the police said, was hunted as a red head, jailed as a brunette, and emerged six months later as a blonde.

She was given the six months sentence because she failed to pay Mrs. Helen O. Jelke $7,500 for alienating the affections of Mrs. Jelke's husband, William.

Up until her last color metamorphosis, Mrs. Markoff's changes had caused police to take a long time to find her.

D. C. Approves Exoneration of Col. Oehmann

Inspector and Captain Seal Will Make Replies to Other Charges.

Exoneration of Col. John W. Oehmann, inspector of buildings, by a special board composed of Commissioner George E. Allen and H. Winship Wheatley, president of the District Bar Association, was formally approved by the District Commissioners at a special board meeting yesterday.

At the same time the commissioners called on Commissioner Allen to report on 15 other charges which had been lodged against Col. Oehmann and Capt. Hugh P. Oram, director of inspection, which have not been made public and were not involved in the nine on which Col. Oehmann was tried at a public hearing.

Copies of the additional charges are to be sent to Col. Oehmann and Capt. Oram by Elwood Seal and Chester H. Gray, assistant corporation counsel, who prepared and prosecuted the charges against Col. Oehmann.

He had ordered the charges sent the two men, Commissioner Allen said, so they could make a written reply to him on each. He said he would give them a "reasonable" time to submit their replies.

Their written reports probably will be supplemented by verbal replies given in conferences with Commissioner Allen. When these have been completed, Commissioner Allen said he would report back to his colleagues with a recommendation that the charges either be dropped as unworthy of further consideration or that they be pursued with a view to disciplinary action.

Although he refused to comment on the remaining charges, saying he had not yet even read them, it is no secret that Commissioner Allen was rather disgusted with the pettiness of the charges and insufficient evidence lodged against Col. Oehmann.

The charges still under study came from William I. Green, president of a local of the operating engineers union. At the Oehmann hearing Green refused to testify saying he would be glad to produce witnesses at a hearing at which Capt. Oram as well as Col. Oehmann was on trial.

Whether there will be another public hearing is not known but indications are there will not be, inasmuch as Seal indicated prior to the Oehmann hearing that the nine charges lodged against the building inspector were the most flagrant and most susceptible of proof.

Trial of McNeill Delayed to Today

Withdrawal of Attorney Causes Postponement.

With the consent of United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, Justice F. Dickinson Letts, in the District Supreme Court, yesterday granted Benedict M. McNeil, former assistant cashier of the closed Park Savings Bank a one-day postponement in his trial on charges of conspiring to embezzle, or steal, $50,000 from the bank.

Sudden withdrawal of McNeil's attorney, William E. Leahy, led to the 24-hour delay. At the same time Leahy withdrew as defense attorney, James F. Reilly and Robert E. Lynch, a former assistant corporation counsel, entered their appearance as his attorneys. Under present arrangements, McNeil will go on trial today at 10 o'clock.

Two men, now deceased, are under indictment on the conspiracy charges. One was McNeil's father, Alexander McNeil, and the other was Robert S. Stuntz, vice president and executive officer of the bank, who committed suicide after the bank was closed by the Treasury Department with a shortage of more than $2,000,000.

Penalties Imposed.

Jerusalem, Nov. 18 (Palcor Agency).—Economic sanctions against Italy were proclaimed throughout Palestine today in a special gazette issued by Sir Arthur Wauchope, high commissioner.

The Inquiring Reporter

Soda Clerk, Barber and Dime Store Employe Give Whole-Hearted Approval of Chest Because "It Knows How to Help the Needy."

Strong arguments in behalf of the Community Chest were advanced yesterday by three persons questioned at random by an inquiring reporter.

Each of those interviewed is pulling for the Chest to reach its goal in the current drive.

LeGrillon Early, of the Peoples Drug Store fountain at Eleventh and G streets northwest, put it this way:

"I think that the Community Chest is the best thing we can have in Washington to help the suffering that we are not able to help directly.

EARLY.

"There are a lot of us glad to help all people who are in need, but we don't know exactly how to go about it.

"Most people who are able to help out are glad to do so, and I know all the boys I have worked with on the fountains are always willing to give what they can because they know the Chest knows how to help the needy and the money will be fairly distributed."

Another Chest friend, Miss Myra Frampton, employed in the office of the S. S. Kresge Co., said:

Miss Frampton

"To me the Community Chest and all it stands for is a wonderful project.

"People who have never seen the tragedy of the poverty-stricken often become impatient with the drive to raise funds for the less fortunate. This attitude often is a result of a lack of study of the activities of the Chest.

"Do you realize the Chest distributes its money among 64 branches of relief? These 64 represent every angle of charity that needs help.

"We can always follow the Golden Rule when we give to a recognized charity drive such as the Community Chest."

COCKERHAM.

Otis Cockerham, manager of Seaton's barber shop, 929 Fifteenth street northwest, remarked:

"The Chest does a lot of good work. It has saved us from much high-pressure salesmanship because when we contribute to the Chest we know we're giving only to worthy causes.

"The Boy Scouts and the Boys Club do particularly good work in keeping the boys off the streets and giving them the exercise and training necessary to make real men out of them.

"I feel the Chest will need much more this year, since many people have used up all their savings and the cost of food and rent is rising so rapidly."

5 Freed in Lynching Held on New Charges

Ashland City, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP). Five white men accused of lynching a Negro were acquitted of murder today but the court at once ordered their arrest on new charges and sent them back to jail.

Hardly had the jury of farmers finished criticizing the verdict, issued bench warrants alleging conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment.

Without a moment's freedom the five filed back to jail.

terest will cause them to come through."

He emphasized the need for attainment of the supplemental objective of $400,000, or 20 per cent more than the $1,877,900 basic goal.

"We are not only seeking to raise 100 per cent of our quota in the governmental unit, but are striving for 120 per cent in order to provide funds for the extra needs that are going to exist as a result of the withdrawal of Federal aid.

Lady Lindsay, wife of the British Ambassador, was introduced by Coleman Jennings, special assignments unit chairman.

"Sir Ronald and Lady Lindsay," Jennings said, "have contributed to the Chest most generously ever since they have been here.

"They gave 20 per cent more this year. If all of our own citizens were so generous we would have no trouble in reaching our goal."

The special assignments unit reported 367 gifts for $388,737, or 69.40 per cent of its quota. One of its largest donors was Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., which gave $5,000, or $500 more than last year.

John Poole, group solicitations unit chairman, reminded the solicitors it took $36 to buy a loaf of bread for a year and $18 a year to buy a pint of milk a day.

"The money is in Washington," he said. "It depends on our approach and our salesmanship.

"But don't let me minimize the importance of small gifts. One of our little gifts was from a girl in Poteet's School. She had 25 cents for lunch and did without lunch so she could give it all to the Chest."

Poole announced his unit has obtained 23,863 contributions totaling $192,198.74, or 48.1 per cent of its allotment.

Bernard Wycoff, metropolitan unit chairman, praised his aids for working "on the most terrible Sunday we ever had in any campaign" to advance their total to $131,528 from 7,597 persons for a percentage of 57.19.

Maj. Gen. Merritt. W. Ireland, governmental unit chairman, told of 70,633 subscriptions for $496,981, or 73.47 per cent.

Elwood Street, director of public welfare and former chest director, will speak at today's report luncheon.

Gifts of $100 or more reported yesterday were as follows: $6,000, Sanitary Grocery Co., Inc.; $5,000, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Hogan; $4,000, Mrs. William G. Eustis; $3,000, Mrs. John C. Gas Firm Plans $850,000 Cut In Rates Here

$21,000,000, they said. They believe, too, they are entitled to a return "substantially greater" than 6½ per cent.

"However," they told the commission, "the companies are willing to agree to these terms of settlement in order to relieve the public and themselves of the uncertainty, delay and expense of protracted litigation, because the companies believe that the stable and automatic rate readjustment provided by the sliding scale arrangement may prove advantageous both to the company and to the public, because the plan for settlement has the support of the conferees, representing the Commission, the People's Counsel and the companies, and furthermore that the companies may at once proceed to make the necessary financial arrangements to meet presently maturing obligations and provide funds for extensions and other requirements of their business."

The sliding-scale plan goes much farther and is much more detailed than that now governing the Potomac Electric Power Co. rates, which has generally become known through the country as the Washington plan. Worked out after months of conferences among lawyers, at which the company was represented by Stoddard M. Stevens, jr., and John Bruton, of Sullivan & Cromwell, New York law firm, the gas plan is designed to anticipate and unequivocally prescribe for every contingency.

Like Electricity Plan.

Like the electricity plan, the gas plan provides that the company shall keep whatever excess earnings it may receive, but it provides for more rapid translation of excess earnings into reduced rates.

If earnings are in excess of 6½ per cent and less than 7½ per cent, one-half of the excess shall be available for rate reductions; if earnings are 7½ per cent and less than 8½ per cent, a new element is introduced into the computation. Then rates shall be reduced by three-fourths of the earnings in excess of 7½ per cent plus ½ of 1 per cent of the rate base. For example, if the companies earned $1,000 in excess of 7½ per cent return on a valuation of $21,750,000, then $750 would represent the three-fourths excess earnings available for reduced rates. To this would be added $108,750, which is ½ of 1 per cent of the rate base, bringing the total for rate reduction to $109,500, instead of merely half the excess earnings.

Should the companies earn 8½ per cent or more, rates would be reduced by 5/6 of the excess earnings above 8½ per cent and 1¼ per cent of the rate base. Thus, should the return exceed 8½ per cent by $1,200, the commission would apply $1,000 of this excess to rate reductions plus $271,875 charged against the rate base.

Should earnings fall below 6½ per cent no increase would be ordered until after that condition had continued for two consecutive years. Then rates would be increased to produce the difference between the rate of return earned and 6½ per cent of the rate base. Between 5½ and 6 per cent the increase would be ¾ of the difference between the return and 6½ per cent; if 5½ per cent or less the amount available for return, that is by which rates would be increased, would be 5/6 of the difference between the return and 6½ per cent.

Under the agreement the commission would be authorized, with consent of the companies, to defer application of not more than 10 per cent of the amounts available for return.

New "Gas Year."

After the new arrangement gets under way, the agreement provides that the "rate" year shall run from September 1 until August 31. The purpose of this, it was said, is to include in future rate computations all of the heavy gas consumption months, which begin in the fall and continue through the winter.

The agreement also provides that the companies shall keep their accounts in accord with commission requirements; accounting mistakes may be immediately taken into consideration when subsequently discovered; annual determination of property used in the District as against that which may be used for consumers outside; that amounts paid by cunsumers for extensions shall be deducted from the valuation; annual adjustment of allowable working capital; that the rate base shall be increased or decreased by additions or retirement on a weighted basis according to the month of the year they were effective; that should fuel, natural gas, production labor and certain other operating expenses increase during a year beyond 5 per cent, allowance is to be made in the permitted earnings.

This last provision, Roberts told the commission, "permits the anticipation of economic conditions upon which any less carefully worked out arrangement might founder."

A reserve of 10 per cent of their valuation is to be built up by the companies, Prettyman told the commission.

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the public utilities committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, and other representatives of the public should be invited to attend the forthcoming public hearings on the plan, Roberts said.

The proposed reductions in rates will not apply to Prince Georges County consumers. The Prince Georges subsidiary was brought into the agreement merely because it owns the 10,000,000-cubic foot gas holder near Chillum, Md., a short distance beyond the District line. This holder is used primarily for storage of gas used by Washington consumers, the companies pointed out.

Steamer Rescues Three From Wrecked Sloop

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Radio Marine and Mackay Radio reported receipt tonight of wireless messages from the steamship George G. Henry that three men had been taken off a wrecked sloop in the Atlantic near the Southern coast.

The steamer's position was given as latitude 36.09 north, 75.30 west, which would place it just north of, and not far off, Cape Hatteras.

Mackay Radio picked up a message stating: "Three men taken off."

G. W. U. and British Debaters to Meet

Debating teams of George Washington University and Cambridge University of England will meet tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in Corcoran Hall on the George Washington campus.

The question will be whether the judiciary should have the power to override executive and legislative decisions. George Washington will uphold such power for the courts, and the Cambridge men will argue against it.

Members of the local team will be Dix Price, a law student, and Allan Thompson, a pre-legal student. Cambridge will be represented by Cuthbert James McCall Alpert and John Royle.

Merchandise en route before sanctions were decreed is exempt.

Cummings Rejects St. Louis Memorial

Necessary $22,500,000 Is Not Available.

Construction of the proposed $30,000,000 Thomas Jefferson Territorial Expansion Memorial at St. Louis was held up yesterday by Attorney General Cummings.

In an opinion addressed to President Roosevelt, the Attorney General said that acceptance of $7,500,000 to be provided by the City of St. Louis would obligate the Government to contribute the remaining $22,500,000. Cummings said he had been informed that while there is some money available from the 1935 relief appropriation, the total amount is not available. In this circumstance, he ruled, the Government would have no legal right to accept the city's contribution.

President Roosevelt recently announced he had approved the project and was about to sign an executive order permitting it to go ahead. The order was first submitted to Cummings who returned it without his approval.

The Canadian Treaty.

Skeptics who predicted that the trade agreement with Canada would consist chiefly of fair words, with tariff reductions limited for the most part to noncompeting products, have been mistaken. Both countries have made substantial cuts in duties affecting a large proportion of their trade with each other and applicable to competing as well as to noncompetitive products.

The treaty is notable, however, not merely because it lowers existing duties but because it carries numerous guarantees against imposition of new tariffs of increases in rates for the duration of the agreement. Thus the United States has promised not to levy import duties upon a long list of free goods coming from Canada. Moreover, Canada has gone beyond according the United States the benefit of her intermediate rates on commodities now subjected to her higher general rates. She has also consented to modify her arbitrary methods of valuing dutiable imports, which have raised actual rates in many cases far above scheduled ones.

The reduced tariffs accorded Canada on such agricultural exports as cattle, cream, lumber and timber products apply only to specified quantities of goods, with all shipments in excess of stipulated amounts paying the old rates of duty. While such a modified quota system prevents the lowered duties from becoming fully effective as a stimulus to Canada's export trade, it has the advantage of propitiating American producers affected by the concessions. At least they cannot claim that their markets are about to be taken away from them. Consequently, this compromise arrangement has much to commend it, judged from the point of view of political expediency, even though it is harder to justify on theoretical grounds.

As the first major test of the efficacy of reciprocal tariff bargaining to achieve the goal of lowered trade barriers, the Canadian treaty has been eagerly awaited. There is good reason to believe that it will, as both governments hope, assure a marked increase in trade without substantial injury to any group of domestic producers, and with gains, both direct and indirect, accruing to many branches of industry and agriculture. There is a great deal of lost ground to be recovered, however, before our trade with Canada can attain the proportions of the year 1929, either in value or in quantity. The value of our exports to Canada is at present about 66 per cent below the level of 1929, while Canadian shipments to this market have fallen about 54 per cent. Although the shrinkage is due in part to a drop in prices, there also has been a sharp reduction in the physical volume of trade.

Despite gains in recent months, our total exports to all countries for the first three quarters of this year are only $7,000,000 higher than during the same period in 1934 and are still 59 per cent below the corresponding totals for 1929. The reduction in total imports is nearly as great, indicating the close correspondence that exists between changes in exports and imports. To regain our lost export trade, not only with Canada but the rest of the world, it is necessary, therefore, to expand our imports or be prepared to become more nearly self-sufficient than heretofore.

The concessions made to Canada, our second largest customer, show that the Administration is earnestly attempting to follow the former course. It has made an excellent start toward its objective of increasing trade, with all that means for employment and stabilized prosperity.

The Golden Rule.

President Roosevelt did not mention the golden rule in refusing "to undertake a policy of interference in the domestic concerns of foreign governments." But it is probable that he had this time-tested guide of conduct well in the forefront of his mind. Whatever the provocation, for the United States to intervene in Mexican religious affairs at this moment would probably be of as negative value as a note from Moscow to Washington protesting discrimination against Russian political principles in the schoolrooms of the Nation's Capital.

Mr. Roosevelt pointed out in his letter to the Knights of Columbus that he has no report of American citizens being denied religious rights in Mexico. The Department of State, which presumably supplied him with the basis for this assertion, can be trusted for the most accurate and complete information on conditions in other countries. And it should be left to the experts of this department, trained and qualified to consider the many angles of international relations, to give the final word of advice upon the conduct of foreign policies of the United States.

The argument is advanced that the United States has "repeatedly expressed sympathy" for other peoples under less aggravated circumstances. But the obvious reply to that is, that we may have so intervened far too often. A nation which leans strongly toward isolation in its foreign policies should be particularly scrupulous about passing official criticisms on the domestic policies of other governments.

The Meaning Of Sanctions.

The lessons of history are not learned by memorization of dates. But it is none the less probable that November 18, 1935, is destined to go down in the records as a most significant day for civilization. The operation of economic sanctions against a great power, duly declared to be a violator of its solemn treaty obligations, is an experiment in collective international action for which no precedent exists. Whether it succeeds, or whether it fails, the effect of the endeavor upon the entire world is bound to be pronounced.

Should this effort prove unable to secure a negotiated settlement of the Ethiopian dispute from Italy, the procedure will scarcely be used again by this generation. With failure would come an end to the present effort to invoke police power to give support to international law. This would not mean total destruction of the League of Nations, for that agency would doubtless continue to assist agreements between governments on technical subjects of mutual interest. But failure of sanctions would mean collapse of the entire peace system with which the League, in its deeper meaning, is synonymous.

Such a collapse would, of course, imply more than mere reversion to the conditions of 1913, when public opinion had generally been educated to regard treaties as sacred. It would involve, rather, definite establishment of the new and disastrous doctrine that obligations freely entered into between nations have no real contractual force. An era of unrestrained international anarchy, with no country really secure and with every country forced to arm against all comers, would unquestionably supervene.

If, on the other hand, sanctions succeed against Italy they will have twofold effect. The failure of Mussolini to get away with it will strongly inhibit other rulers now watching this crisis closely. And the League will tend to give a more prompt and vigorous lead in behalf of treaty sanctity if, as and when another case of flagrant violation arises.

In a situation of such moment to all civilization the term "neutrality" has a very hollow ring. Even though he may not be endangered personally, no rational motorist can afford to be indifferent to a driver who runs casually through a red traffic light. On the congested highway of international life that is exactly what Mussolini has done. And those who think this makes no difference to any but Ethhiopians are those who feel completely neutral on the subject of observing traffic signals. Undoubtedly they are a small minority of thinking citizens.

The majority of Americans, therefore, will not merely hope to see the pressure of collective action bring speedy termination to Mussolini's illegal war, but will hope even more devoutly that this country will not assist him to win out. To the superficial aspect of the problem we can be indifferent. It matters little to us whether the Italians conquer all, or half, or none of Ethiopia. But in the deeper aspects of the problem neutrality is impossible. America can not afford to have history say that, after 60 nations had defined Italy as a violator of treaties, we successfully aided the guilty government in spite of all our lip service to the cause of peace.

The issue for the United States, moreover, is not merely one of morals or ethics. For those who treasure our traditional liberties, and our democratic form of government, the problem is severely practical. If sanctions succeed, disarmament will again become a possibility. If sanctions fail, the word might as well be stricken from the dictionary.

Huge armaments, costing staggering sums, would then be the inevitable order of the day. They would assist the trend toward that strongly centralized, dictatorial form of government which has always developed with excessive emphasis on military power. Conscription, except in war time, has heretofore been regarded as unthinkable in the United States. That will soon cease to be the case, if sanctions fail.

If sanctions fail, protestants against preparedness may for a time be tolerated in the United States; but not for long. As we arm to defend ourselves, in a world of nations which know no law, the conscientious objector and the pacifist would surely be suppressed, as they have been already in Italy, in Germany, in Russia and in Japan.

At Charlottesville.

The University of Virginia, particularly its research and natural science departments, is honored to have been designated host for the autumn meeting of the National Academy of Sciences, which opened its sessions in Charlottesville yesterday. It is the first time in the 72 years of the academy's existence that a Southern university has been singled out for such recognition.

Among the half a hundred papers to be read at the meeting, eleven have been prepared by members of the university faculty. For the most part they deal with highly abstract and specialized subjects. But it is interesting to note one which every layman could take an interest in. Its title reads "How Cars Go Out of Control: Analysis of the Driver's Reflexes."

The phenomenon of steadily mounting death on the highway is now receiving the most expert scientific attention—and none too soon.

Aimed At The WPA?

The National Resources Committee declares that State Planning activities are "an indispensable factor in any effective program for better utilization of the natural and human resources of the country." It holds also that "too great centralization in Washington is not desirable even if possible," since effective planning requires the "co-operation of wide groups of people."

It is to be hoped that WPA Administrator Hopkins, who is a member of the committee, has found time to read and digest the recommendations of the board, even though he has made no constructive use of the careful preliminary work of the advisory committee headed by Frederic A. Delano.

Planning boards have been established in 46 States and many of them have done excellent work in elaborating long-time public works programs, studying methods of land utilization, and carrying on other surveys. These studies should have constituted the basis for the program of work relief. Had that course been followed the WPA would have benefited the communities and met long felt needs.

But the careful work of the State and National Committees has been ignored and wasteful boondoggling substituted for constructive activities. Instead of placing emphasis upon planning from the bottom up, Federal work relief has been directed from the top down, often through administrators unfamiliar with local conditions. Instead of looking toward the future, the work relief program has followed purely opportunistic lines, solely with a view to creating immediate employment.

The co-ordination among the States and the Federal Government, which the National Resources Committee declares to be of "prime importance," has also been singularly lacking. The detachment from political influences, regarded as essential if planning boards are to be really useful, has certainly not been characteristic of the haphazard type of Federal planning which goes by the name of work relief. In fact, if Administrator Hopkins were not a member of the committee which has endorsed the views set forth, one might almost believe that he himself is the target of its attack.

Secretary Hull says the United States must keep its back turned to the Italo-Ethiopian war. It's the only way Uncle Sam can manage to keep his nose out of it.

Any recipe for longevity will produce results if you'll stick to it long enough.

The Community Chest Replies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The anonymous "Federal Employe" whose letter appeared in The Post this morning brings out, in friendly fashion and from the standpoint of one who believes in the Community Chest, three problems on which I should like to comment.

1. The Community Chest has consistently turned its face against coercion, and seeks only voluntary gifts. But a voluntary gift on the part of a person who is not acquainted with what the agencies of the Chest are doing requires explanation of those activities and some real salesmanship on the part of the solicitor. Many people evidently interpret explanations as arguments and arguments as pressure, when in fact a solicitor, who in most cases is a genuine Chest enthusiast, is simply doing his best to explain the importance of generous giving to a potential contributor who sees many other personally appealing uses for his money.

2. Human activities seem to need a definite objective. So a campaign goal and the team, division, or section quotas which make it up are the equivalent of the necessary method of scoring in any contest. Evidently many people interpret the explanation of a quota for a business house or a Government office as an attempt to compel each person to give a specific proportion of that quota. I have made many inquiries in offices where coercion was charged and am increasingly convinced that the statement—"if we all give such and such a proportion of our pay, we can meet our goal" is sometimes misinterpreted to mean "you must give such and such a proportion of your pay." I have talked with many division chairmen in the governmental unit and they have repeatedly asserted that they would not think of discriminating in the slightest degree for or against an employe who did or did not contribute.

3. I question the statement that more than half of his fellow employes with whom "Federal Employe" talked made their pledges "with no intention of completing the contract." I wonder if they realize that the work of the agencies is controlled entirely by their budgets, which in turn are based on the supposition that promises made to the Community Chest are valid. I can think of no practice more unfair to the sick and the aged, to orphan children, and the many others who receive Community Chest money, than to make them a promise with no intention of fulfilling it. I would far rather know that a person refused to give because he honestly felt that he could not afford it, or definitely did not wish to share with those less fortunate than himself, than to feel that a pledge was received but that the man who signed it does not intend to pay it.

I repeat that the Community Chest asks for voluntary gifts. The fact that some offices are vastly exceeding their quotas indicates to me a degree of interest and generosity that takes little account of a minimum goal. That is the spirit that should dominate giving to the Community Chest. We so much disapprove coercion that we repeat our annual statement, that if a contributor comes to the Chest office and says that he was compelled to give his pledge will be refunded.

Generous, voluntary, intelligent giving is what the Community Chest stands for.

Sanctions Become Effective?

On The Teaching Of Communism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial on "Teachers' Oaths" in this morning's issue seems to show a little of the "intimidating effect" you rightly regard as a "demoralizing tendency." The editorial on the whole is commendable, though one might wish it had been somewhat more positive in attitude toward the bullying tactics of certain extreme conservatives who are trying to strip teachers of the one quality that can make them an inspiration to their pupils—absolute freedom "to follow the indications of truth wherever they may lead."

The intense fear of the Russian experiment that possesses these reactionary minds indicates they are suffering from an inferiority complex—consciousness of inability to cope with communism by the application of reason. And, of course, they cannot conceive there are teachers who do possess the ability to deal fairly and intelligently with the subject. So these modern witch hunters would use force and strangle it, just as the witch hunters of past ages sought to strangle new conceptions by burning or hanging a few leaders of the new thought. History teaches reactionary minds nothing or they long ago would have learned that each time a leader is destroyed a score or more of new leaders are created by the act to carry the hated movement forward with greater vigor and power. In a state of fear such as they are in it may be futile to call their attention to the guarantee of free speech in the United States Constitution and to remind them that the Constitution of each of the 48 States has a similar guarantee, the Constitution of Wisconsin providing:

> Every person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press.

Perhaps the only way to free those fear-stricken minds would be for Congress or the District Board of Education to issue a declaration similar to that proclaimed by the Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin some years ago when charges of heretical teaching were brought against one of its professors. The regents in their declaration of academic freedom stated:

> We cannot for a moment believe that knowledge has reached its final goal, or that the present constitution of society is perfect. We must therefore welcome from our teachers such discussions as shall suggest the means and prepare the way by which knowledge may be extended, present evils be removed and others prevented. In all lines of investigation the investigator should be absolutely free to follow the indications of truth wherever they may lead. Whatever may be the limitations that trammel inquiry elsewhere, we believe that the great State University of Wisconsin should ever encourage that continual and fearless sifting and winnowing by which alone the truth may be found.
> Give absolute freedom to all teachers, merely holding them responsible for the abuse of that right, and in a few years even the witch hunters will be freed of the terrible fear that now haunts their minds.

O. J. SCHUSTER.
Clarendon, Va., Nov. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since The Post has been criticized for publishing only the "weak" articles which do not favor teaching communism in our public schools, as one of the so-called "weak," I congratulate the paper on its reply to such criticism, and once more state my side of the controversy: Congress is to blame for the confusion which has arisen on this matter.

The apple of discord was thrown into the gathering of the gods, by the hastily phrased, unhappily timed inhibition on communism. The "cat is out of the bag," to put the thing popularly. What could have been mentioned or interpreted previously in the classroom of the public school, becomes now a matter which involves too much to do other than pass it up. If a Damocles' sword is to be hung over the teacher who dares give the pros as well as the cons of communism, then let it take its place with religion and be relegated to home teaching.

And since when did parents so far vacate their rights to teach many things which the public schools do not and should not teach? Why put the onus on the public school teacher, when a Congressional act has endangered his or her salary, and even position, if the teacher tells the good points of communism? My contention is that no subject is taught which is merely denounced.

J. O. KNOTT.
Washington, Nov. 17.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There should be, at the next session of Congress, an investigation of the activities of Maj. Gen. A. A. Fries, going back at least as far as the K. K. K. and the "Spider Web" chart.

At present he is engaged in another battle against the "Red" peril. The writer is not a Communist or in sympathy with them, but certainly is in favor of free speech, and believes in and will support fully the whole Constitution of the United States, not merely fragments of this noble document.

Independent thought and action is too precious a heritage to allow it to be destroyed without protest.

J. F. HIGGINS.
Star City, W. Va., Nov. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Teachers' Oaths," meets with the approval of all fair-minded people. Comptroller McCarl's ruling that D. C. teachers must "sign the pledge" every month when they draw their salary and swear that "in or out of the schools" they have not "taught or advocated communism" has all the force of law by fiat. If that is not dictatorship beyond anything supposed to exist in the Soviet Union or Nazi Germany today, I fail to understand what dictatorship is.

One glaring weakness in McCarl's attitude is that he would convict of a specific "crime" without defining that "crime." What is "communism?" Is it high income taxes for the rich as Hearst preaches; is it mild government ownership such as socialism; is it pacifism; is it working for international peace and good will?

It is well-established princple of law that before you can convict a person of a crime, you must specifically define the crime. I have been unable to find where "communism" is a "crime" on the statutes. Communism may be folly. So may single tax, peace efforts, the Townsend plan, prohibition and a lot of other things. But McCarl's ruling strips every D. C. teacher of his rights as a citizen when he extends his rule "outside" of the classroom. In many States, the Communist Party is legally existent and has a lawful place on the printed ballot at elections. If, by "communism," McCarl means violence and some illegal actions, these are already adequately covered by laws. Are men and women to be convicted and starved out for their political opinions? Who is to define communism? Who has the right in the United States, under the Constitution, to dictate the political opinions of teachers "outside of the classroom?" ARISTOTLE.
Alexandria, Va., Nov. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country." I am neither a Communist nor a Socialist—in fact, I have been guilty at times of voting for Republican candidates for office—but Comptroller McCarl's ruling on the subject of "teaching communism" gets under my skin as it would have got under the skin of my revolutionary ancestors (revolutionary to be understood, of course, in the correct sense of fighters in the American Revolution). Surely the framers of the Constitution, who guaranteed freedom of speech to all, would not have envisioned a situation which would have refused to anyone, least of all teachers, the right to state the facts about any government on earth.

Do the persons who are opposing communism think that it is so attractive that the mere presentation of the fact that there are in this world governments based on communism will make our growing youth embrace the system? If so, they have less faith in the American tradition than I have!

But what exercises me is the idea that the constitutional provision for free speech is thus flouted by the decision of any commissioner of the budget—or, indeed, of any Congress. If we have a Congressional law concerning communism thus interpreted, then why not a similar law so passed and so interpreted, forbidding a discussion of Republican (or Democratic) principles? Such a law—against the Republicans—might easily be passed in any Democratic Congress as dominated by the party as was the last Congress—and then we should be well on the way toward dictatorship of the sort that prevails in Germany and Italy, where the people and the press dare not utter a word which might be distasteful to the powers that be.

One who could be, but proudly is not—

Washington, Nov. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It looks as if we had reached the ultimate height of paradox in the crusade of hysteria against socialism in public school instruction, because the public school system itself is the most perfect type of pure socialism in existence, and the only unmixed socialistic institution in America. F. G. DAWSON.
Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I hold no brief for communism, but if the present policy is maintained and teachers are muzzled on the subject it will tend to stimulate rather than check interest. To taboo all information about the political system of a single country would arouse concern and curiosity.

I would suggest that a textbook be prepared and furnished to the public schools, giving out suitable information on all forms of government. Furthermore, I see no reason why we do not expel from the country any alien who preaches a doctrine which would tend to subvert our form of government. We have plenty of precedent for such procedure among the most enlightened nations of the world.

The Post Impressionist

A High Hat For High Art.

Post Office, Tuesday.

THIS columnist knows the history of Hungary—and a great history it is—but his knowledge of the Hungarian language is a little limited. He is master of only enough of it to get along in the greater part of new Rumania and certain extensive sections of New York.

Still, he does occasionally achieve perusal of a Hungarian newspaper, and from this process he has just discovered how a damage suit won by the plaintiff may result in profit to the defendant.

The thing happened up in the north of what the World War treaties have left of Hungary: in old Esztergom.

A while since, a certain substantial citizen of that town went for his Sunday afternoon stroll over the hill on which stands the beautiful Esztergom Cathedral. He wore his Sabbath best, including a new top-hat.

A piece of ancient masonry, detached from a bastion, fell on him. It cut his cheek, which was bad enough. It smashed his headpiece, which was unbearable. So he sued the cathedral authorities, owners of the hill, and won his suit.

More:

The municipal court ordered immediate repair of the crumbling bastion. This job was superintended by Canon Leopold of the cathedral, who is a good architect, an even better antiquarian. Excavation proved necessary.

The first few inches of digging revealed some extraordinary stone-carvings.

The removal of a foot or two of earth convinced the canon that he had come across the Lost Palace of the Arpad Kings.

Now, don't say you've forgotten who they were or it was . . .

Oh, well—here you are, then!

Roman settlers in the province of Pannonia built a watch-tower at S a l v a. Aryan Charlemagne's Franks, building a fort around the tower, called the result "Osterringun"—that being, apparently, as near as they could come to the "Esztergom" which the Hungarians were to call it afterward. Then a Hungarian monarch turned Roman watch-tower and Frankish fort into a fitting home for a Princess of Syria.

Bela III was the builder, the date about 1173—the woman, Anne de Chatillon. Raymond, her father, had stopped at Antioch on his way back from the crusades and, marrying Constanzia, Queen of Antioch, never got any nearer home. Their daughter he called Agnes, having her baptized in the Western Church, but she chose the Eastern at the court of Byzantium, where she was brought up, and took the name of Anne. It was to please her that her husband, Hungarian Bela, put Byzantine touches to the structure: he made it unique in his time and her ultimate land.

Throughout the Middle Ages, chroniclers, architects and critics extolled the place, some of the best of which was built below ground. Two hundred years after its completion, Louis the Great, of the Anjou dynasty, who knew all the glories of his native Naples, counted this their infinite superior. Bonfini, one of the best of Italian humanists, declared there was no jewel to compare with it in Italy. And it was the envy of both England and France.

Then it passed from reality into legend. The Turk came and destroyed. Against him came the Spanish mercenaries of the Austrian Hapsburgs—and destroyed also. Gunfire shattered the superstructure. It had been given to the archbishops of Esztergom: in 1820, the Prince Primate Rudnay ordered the upper walls pulled down, the rest buried.

"Since then," says our informant, "not a trace has been seen of what was the most illustrious royal palace in Europe." Records perished, too. Soon even the memory of the precise site was lost.

But now?

"Excavation has progressed so that a fairly complete picture of the thousand years' old building and of its artistic value can be obtained." The court-chapel has already been unearthed and found to be in excellent condition—the royal bedroom, the servants' quarters, the once famous "Hall of Horoscopes." "What mural paintings remain intact—below the surface of which two older layers of painting may be detected—show a decidedly Italian style." The prophets in the chapel are reminiscent of the early Siena school. The cardinal virtues of the Hall of Horoscopes are in the Botticelli manner . . .

And critics and historians are hurrying to Esztergom.

That Hungarian newspaper has almost converted us to a belief in the pragmatic value of a high-hat on Sundays.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Barcelona, Nov. 18.

TAKING one consideration with another, it's my conclusion that the job which former King Alfonso abdicated when the revolution broke was almost all headache and very little fun. He was head man of a declining country, and it seemed that nothing could be done to check the steady descent of a once mighty nation.

Britain had grabbed Gibraltar, the Americans had chased Spain out of the Caribbean and the Pacific, his people were poor, his politicians clamorous, incompetent and uneasy and his generals either horribly dumb or terribly unlucky.

It had come to such a pass that Spain just couldn't win a war any more, and this in spite of the fact that everybody who fought his troops would say after licking them that they were good, game boys, but overmatched or out of shape. They died magnificently on various fields and though there is a certain satisfaction in such regard and tributes of victorious foes, the fact remains that in war the object is not to die magnificently, but to leave that honor to the opposite team.

* * * *

IN dejection of soul produced by painful beatings in war and by the steady decline of Spain in the eyes of her former equals in the world, the people fell to growling, and the King, as general manager, so to speak, was held responsible. Moreover, knowing of the jewelry he had in store and the splendor in which he lived on money which they were compelled to provide, they developed a fierce personal resentment against him, although the fact of the matter was that he didn't eat much, drank little and was bowed, worried and desperately anxious.

Yet no matter whether he blew on the dice or rubbed them on his pants, all he could throw was acey deuce. Spain is not a large country and although there is plenty of room in which to chase the stag, Alfonso's favorite sport, there came a time as he grew older when he knew every yard of it as well as his tongue knew the inside of his mouth. For a change of pace he could put on a soft hat and sneak off to Paris for a week-end, but he had a jaded mark on his face and was recognized wherever he went, so the upshot of three attempts to get away from it all was more resentment.

People who couldn't afford to teach their children to read, because then they would demand books and newspapers on which to exercise this remarkable talent, thought of the King lolling around to the gilded haunts of pleasure in a foreign city, eating hods of caviar and pouring champagne over his oatmeal at their expense. To a degree this was true, but the cost of these pleasures was hardly a nickel in the general expense of running a losing business. Much worse than the cost was the bad publicity which his pleasures gave him with the people, whose idea of a wonderful time was a ropy shred of boiled billygoat washed down by a crock of grade B wine.

* * * *

ALFONSO, being King, could not go down to the pool hall of an evening and fan things over with anyone who happened to be there, but was socially restricted to a royal and noble circle and a limited number of ordinary people. Condemned to be with the same people so many years, knowing all their woes by heart and hemmed in by convention and the boundaries of a country which doesn't provide much range, the King undoubtedly had moments when he thought of his mad money, planted in Paris or London or wherever it was that he was sending his earnings against the day when he might wish to resign.

But he was game and hung on, doing the best he could, not neglecting, of course, to take his profits from time to time, although there were periods when he knew that there were individuals among his subjects who were squinting through their sights ready to shoot him if the chance presented.

* * * *

I AM not contending that the King is justified in taking too much salary for himself and his family and planting huge sums of money in foreign countries, but it must be true that the job of king in a second-rate nation is more tradition, tinsel and boredom than pleasure.

There's only one really first-rate king's country left in the world, anyway, that being George's in England, where the people know how to make the King feel good and don't load him down with a responsibility which turns to personal blame when things go wrong.

George of Greece is welcome to his kingdom. His palace probably has draughts, and when they fail to do better the Greeks will get mad at the King again, and he not even a Greek himself but just a descendant of a foreigner who was hired for the job.

Lectured on Brakes, He Draws New Auto

Madison, Wis., Nov. 18 (AP).—Policeman H. Austin White stopped Fred Bartel's car two weeks ago and told Fred he'd have to get his brakes fixed or receive a ticket.

Sunday night Policeman White reached into a pile of auto show admission ticket stubs and drew out a number entitling the holder to a new car for $1.

Whose stub did he draw?

It was Bartel's.

Persecution in Mexico

Catholic Student Of Mexican History Discusses Present Status Of Struggle Between State And Church South Of The Rio.

By Paul V. Murray.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

WHEN President Cardenas broke the spell of Calles in Mexican politics last June, many people believed that he would attempt to ease the tension between church and state by repealing the more obnoxious antireligious laws promulgated and enforced under the Calles regime. The dismissal of the dictator of Tabasco, Tomas Garrido Canabal, from the Cardenas cabinet, was hailed as a sign that the new president disagreed with the violent and blasphemous campaign carried on against all religion by the former secretary of agriculture.

Cardenas, however, has failed to act as expected and his government's reply to the recent petition of the Mexican Catholic bishops (as reported in The Post of November 6) shows that the successor to Calles has no intention of working out a compromise with the clergy. The church, as Javert put it in "Les Miserables," will be held to "the law, good, bad or indifferent; but, the law, to the letter!"

The unyielding stand of the Mexican authorities is disclosed in the reply of November 5 to the pastoral letter submitted by the Mexican hierarchy on October 11. The bishops had asked for the repeal of the anti-religious laws and had pointed out the long list of suggested reforms advocated by the three national Catholic Social Congresses held in Mexico between 1900 and 1910. They pleaded for a chance to work in free co-operation with the government in improving the social and economic status of the country. They appealed, with sound logic and commendable dignity, to the sense of justice of those in power, speaking as Mexicans to Mexicans, as men to men.

Space forbids more than a bare mention either of the letter or the answer it drew from Senor Silvano Barba Gonzalez, secretary of the interior. Senor Gonzalez, as already reported by The Post, wrote a long reply and cited a great number of reasons why the government could not accede to the pastoral communication. But, in the long run, his letter simply amounted to an emphatic "No." And there the matter rests for the time being.

* * * *

NO doubt the members of international good will groups, such as Rotary and the Lions, will tell you that "we saw no religious persecution in Mexico while holding our conventions there." Of course they didn't—and neither did I on my annual visit—but the persecution was going on just the same. No Rotarian or Lion saw people dragged into the streets and shot because they went to church; nor were the prisons packed with priests who had been caught at unlawful religious exercises.

Yet casual American visitors must not forget that the present government is straining every nerve to develop a tourist trade which has an opportunity to rival Europe's, especially with war clouds hanging over the old continent. Government officials would have been guilty of a terrible blunder had they really enforced (at least in Mexico City) the laws against religion which the Constitution of 1917 contains. During recent conventions the government connived at the violation of its own unjust laws against religious liberty when it failed to make the proper arrests.

A few words should be said concerning the official Mexican attitude on the "persecution." The spokesmen for this attitude claim that people are free to go to church and to fulfill religious duties "so long as they obey the laws of the land." Space does not permit a full answer to this sophistry. All that can be done is to refer the interested reader to the most recent publications concerning the state of religion in Mexico. The first reference—and as the unprejudiced mind will readily grasp, by far the weakest—is Portes Gil's governmental statement of the question, published last spring under the title: The Struggle Between the Civil Power and the Clergy.

* * * *

THE former President of the Republic under the Calles regime makes out a plausible case for his side—unless one knows enough Mexican history to be wary of the source used. A clever, witty and utterly devastating reply to Senor Gil's accusations will be found in Bishop Francis C. Kelley's "Blood-Drenched Altars," also published last spring. Bishop Kelley has been an authority on Mexican affairs for more than 20 years and when he turns his guns on the present and past stage managers of those affairs, things happen.

Granting, if you will, that both the above works are ex parte statements of the question, two other recent publications defy such classification. One is "Chaos in Mexico," written by the Rev. Charles MacFarland, who is noted for his work on behalf of religious toleration and his high standing in the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Dr. MacFarland met and talked with hundreds of people in Mexico, government officials, business men, clergymen, students, professors, laborers and labor officials, and others who might be in position to furnish information. His conclusions are stated in exact and clear-cut terms: There is persecution in Mexico, the church has a stronger case than the government, and the majority of people are opposed to the present state of affairs.

The latest word on the matter comes from the American committee on religious rights and minorities, an interdenominational body of Protestants, Jews and Catholics, motivated "by their common concern to maintain the principle and the practice of religious liberty." This group sent a fact-finding deputation to Mexico, composed of Dr. Philip Marshall Brown, former professor of University, a Protestant; Carl Sherman, a Jew, former attorney international law at Princeton general of New York State, and William Franklin Sands, of Washington, D. C., a Catholic, who was connected with the State Department and who has seen much active diplomatic service in Mexico and Central America.

* * * *

SOME of the observations made by the committee and presented in pamphlet form demand quotation. Pointing out that the question at issue is whether the government of Mexico is denying religious liberty to its people, the pamphlet says: "The report of this open-minded deputation will, we think, make irrefutably clear that the government is doing this, and that it is not simply endeavoring to free itself from former ecclesiastical interference in affairs of state, but that it is seeking the abolition of religion itself in substantially the same way as the Soviet government of Russia."

While granting that the Catholic Church suffers most since it is the oldest and most widely-spread organization in the country, the pamphlet states further: "Judged, not by the criticism of its opponents, but by the enactments of the government itself and the declarations of its own officials, the deliberate purpose is not merely the correction of alleged abuses in any church, but the extirpation of all religion in the country. Since the return of the deputation, still further confirmation of this has been given by President Cardenas's decree in September for the nationalization of church properties, which is one of the harshest and most oppressive anti-religious laws ever passed in any land. Such a policy justifies the strong protest, not only of the Mexican churches and their members, but of the friends of religious liberty in other lands, irrespective of their church affiliations."

So much for this report, made by men of intelligence, experience in government and law, and disposed to tell the truth as they see it.

Liberty League's Chance

MRS. ROOSEVELT applied some old-fashioned common sense to her analysis of the current Red-menace nonsense, but it seems to me that she did not go far enough, perhaps because there were reporters present and it does not do, under such a circumstance, for anyone in public life to think aloud too strenuously. Nevertheless, she managed to put into words of one syllable a supposition that can hardly be refuted with any degree of logic. And she succeeded in making the disputed law as ridiculous as the Tennesseean edict which, in less confusing days, became known far and wide, and for more than one reason, as the "monkey law."

Her picture of the schoolma'am being legally coerced into refraining from any mention of Russia, except as a rather large blot on the map, was very pretty. Indirectly it showed the fallacy of a law which forbids instruction in communism and yet allows complete freedom to mention, discuss and even advocate the equally un-American systems of government now being imposed upon Italians, Germans and Ethiopians.

* * * *

ASIDE from this law being as obviously unconstitutional as it is ridiculous, the threat which it carries is one which should cause unlimited concern outside the public school system. It was put over on the people very easily and very quietly, as most tyrannical legislation is. And very likely the Friesians in our midst are already working toward the imposition of similar edicts against teachers in institutions not supported by congressional generosity.

Several States now make all teachers swear to defend the Constitution which, as American citizens, they expect and intend to do anyway without signing any pledge. Such laws are a long step towards Hitlerism and should be done away with forthwith unless it is true that the democracy they used to teach as guaranteed by the Constitution is but a myth and no longer wanted by the majority.

If the "don't teach" idea spreads, Dr. Walsh, of Georgetown, for instance, will have to stop telling his boys that the Soviet system is hardly consistent with their religious beliefs for, unless he can discuss communism, he cannot point out its antireligious features. Prof. Elliott, of Harvard, that interesting analyist of comparative politics, may have to refrain from telling his students not to take Prof. Laski so seriously, if this fiasco is continued. For Laski makes no bones about his interest in communism.

* * * *

IT MIGHT not be a bad idea if Dr. Ballou issued an order instructing all his teachers to refrain from ever mentioning in any class anything about Russia, Germany, Italy, Mexico, or even the New Testament, Plato, Shelley and Brook Farm. I am sure that if he did, under the cloak of the law, there would arise an indignant howl from parents who, for some strange reason, happen to send their children to school in the hope that they won't grow up as ignorant fools. Strict enforcement of most unreasonable laws used to be considered the surest and quickest way to end them under our system of representative government and this, so far as I have heard, has never officially been superseded by a dictatorship either of the proletariat or of the American Legion.

But since the present policy seems to be to depend upon the Supreme Court for the nullification of any unpopular rule, perhaps the more proper procedure would be to make a test case of the law rather than to wait for Congress to repeal it. For this reason I hope some brave school teacher will fail to sign his little pink card and thus be forced to sue for his money in the courts. He need not fear for moral support nor need he turn to the Civil Liberties Union or even the Legal Aid Society for a dependable mouthpiece.

* * * *

AT such a martyr's beck should arise such legal lights as John W. Davis, James M. Beck, Frank J. Hogan and former Gov. Joseph B. Ely, all members of the American Liberty League's National Lawyers Committee which, under sanction of the American Bar Association, has promised their experience and skill "if and when any American citizen, however humble, is without means to defend his constitutional rights in a court of justice."

There seems to me to be at present no more humble citizens than almost any District school teacher and all school teachers are generally without many means, their pay being what it is. Here is a grand chance for the American Liberty League to read up on the bill of rights and, having read those ten sections of the Constitution, to call their attention to the populace through the Supreme Court.

It would not only be an honorable thing to do, but also the exercise of a self-appointed duty of that non-political group. Let's go!

Stalin Declares Soviet on Road To 'Better Life'

Terms New Work System Step From Socialism to Communism.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Nov. 18.—Soviet Russia, Joseph Stalin said today, has taken a "preparatory step" in its change from state socialism to communism.

Opening the Stakhanovite campaign, by which production is being increased through an enlargement of the individual worker's output, the Soviet leader declared all citizens of the U. S. S. R. would have "welfare and a more cultured" life under the new scheme.

He told 3,000 prominent workingmen and women at the first national Stakhanovite congress in the Kremlin that their gathering was a "preparatory step" for the shift from socialism to communism.

Karl Radek, noted political commentator, in an official interpretation of Stalin's speech in the newspaper Pravda, said:

"Stalin's words are a prediction that the time for this new life is coming and we shall live to see it."

Following Lenin.

Radek said Stalin was following in the footsteps of Nikolai Lenin, one-time Soviet leader. He called attention to the fact that Stalin had reminded his listeners of Lenin's statement that food and oher necessities would be distributed according to need, under communism, and not in regard to the purchasing power of an individual because of his working capacity.

The Stakhanovite system, called "rationalization of movements" for the more efficient use of tools, is now being used in several factories and textile mills. The process has met great opposition, however.

Several Stakhanovite workmen have been murdered and others beaten. One person was sentenced to death and others were arrested for attempting to disrupt Stakhanovite operations.

Stalin called the movement the means of bringing production to the point where real communism can be begun. Stakhanovite workmen, he declared, are approaching the position of technically educated engineers. He said the differences between mental and physical labor will eventually be removed, making his goal at hand.

Foes to Be Crushed.

Opponents of the movement, the Soviet leader asserted, should be crushed relentlessly.

Klementi E. Voroshiloff, commissar of war and navy, advocated rapid spread of the Stakhanovite system to strengthen Russia's defenses. He declared "our enemies are surrounding us and preparing for war."

G. K. Ordjonokidze, commissar for heavy industry, expressed the belief the movement "will so strengthen our country that no Hitlers and no Japanese imperialists will dare plot against our land."

Workmen under the Stakhanovite method are receiving greatly increased pay, some earning more than 1,000 rubles a month, as compared with their old wages of 150 to 200 rubles.

Russians, however, look on the system not so much as a producer of more money, but of more comfort.

Roper Hints Possibility of U. S. Taking Over Merchant Marine

Secretary Warns of Ship Shortage in Event of War; Tells Industry Concessions Must Be Made in New Subsidy Legislation.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 18.—Warning against a potential shortage of merchant ships in war emergencies, Secretary Roper tonight projected the possibility of Government ownership of the merchant marine.

The Commerce Secretary advanced these arguments before the American merchant marine conference as reasons why conflicting interests must be willing to make concessions on new subsidy legislation.

"Let us say here with great frankness," Roper said, "that we are at that critical point in our merchant marine situation when the industry must support an approach of this kind if Government ownership and operation is to be delayed or prevented."

Discussing present conditions of the merchant fleet, he said:

"It is well known and deeply lamentable that, while we are building up our navy to treaty strength, we are doing virtually nothing to supply the navy with modern auxiliaries. Even as it exists today the navy would find our merchant marine inadequate for its emergency requirements, especially in speed.

Fleet Is Inadequate.

"When navy treaty strength is finally reached, the disparity between our first and second lines of defense will be still more strikingly apparent unless in the meantime we build up the merchant marine.

"Official figures recently compiled show that in the event of a major campaign the present-day United States would need 900 merchant ships, totaling approximately 6,000,000 gross tons. Some idea of what this means is obtained from the statement that we have only 488 carriers of goods and passengers in the foreign trade, of approximately 3,065,000 gross tons.

"Withdrawal of the required amount of tonnage for defense purposes from the merchant fleet would paralyze our commerce, foreign and domestic, and endanger the importation of something like 30 essential raw materials, without which it would be virtually impossible to conduct a protracted war with a foreign power.

Direct Subsidies.

"The American merchant marine under improving conditions must have the financial and moral support of the United States Government."

The Secretary proposed a program "that will look to a gradual decrease of subsidies and a strengthening of the industry through non-governmental financing and development."

Harris & Ewing.

SECRETARY ROPER.

"Fortunately," Roper said, "the President has laid down the broad general scheme, or outline, which in his opinion should be followed by Congress in enacting legislation designed to put a new subsidy system into effect.

"The Chief Executive recommends that the existing ocean mail contracts be terminated, and that they be superseded by a more direct form of subsidy, in which the construction and operating aids would be treated separately.

"The amount of subsidy granted in any given case would be based on differentials in building and operating cost, plus a third factor brought into the equation by reason of the liberal subsidies paid by many foreign governments to their shipping agencies."

The Limit.

"Well," said Elmer Twitchell today with an extremely sour look (Elmer's on a short leave from Ethiopia), "the feminine influence on drinking since repeal has been pretty disturbing, but it's reached the limit. What do you think they're putting out now by way of free lunch? Popcorn and candy mints!"

The I. C. C. is going to probe the management of the New Haven road. It must feel an irrepressible urge to jump on a corpse. There was plenty to investigate a couple of decades ago, perhaps, but all the management has been doing during the past ten years is trying to keep up steam, buy ice for the water tanks and have a few nickels left over for cleaning the upholstery.

Olson to Seek Seat in Senate In '36 Election

Minnesota Governor Will Try to Oust Schall Upon 'Power Trust' Issue.

By the Associated Press.

Floyd Olson, Farmer-Labor Governor of Minnesota, last night announced he would run next year for the seat in the United States Senate now held by Thomas D. Schall, Republican.

Olson, here on State business, completes his third term with the end of 1936.

He indicated Government regulation of public utilities would be a prime issue in the campaign to unseat Schall, who has been a persistent critic of the Roosevelt Administration.

"He's for the power trust and I'm against them," the Governor declared.

Picks Own Issue.

The Farmer-Laborite Governor chose his own, however. He said he'd take the affirmative side of the proposition that the judiciary had exceeded its authority under the Constitution and let his opponent have the negative.

The Minnesotan showed no inclination to open the debate in Georgia, even though Talmadge facetiously had guaranteed him immunity from "any Georgia chain gang or penitentiary."

Eyeing the Republican possibilities for the 1936 nomination, the Minnesotan said Senator William E. Borah "is the class of the field."

He spoke lightly of the chances of Gov. Landon of Kansas, Herbert Hoover, Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago and Representative Wadsworth of New York.

Cites Strength in West.

"Borah is the most formidable man the Republicans could put up as far as the West is concerned," he said. "I don't think he'll get the nomination, though, because of Eastern capital."

He answered "I don't know" when asked whether he would vote for President Roosevelt as against Borah.

"I hear Borah could carry Illinois over Roosevelt," he said. "It would be close in Minnesota."

He minimized the significance of the AAA as an issue.

"I don't think the Supreme Court will knock it out, but if it does, there are other ways to care for the farmer," he said.

Olson declared there was skepticism in third party circles about entering a Presidential ticket in the 1936 election.

Georgia Party In Open Break On Roosevelt

State Committee Split on Demand for Primary Presidential Vote.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Nov. 18.—An open break over President Roosevelt developed today among members of Gov. Eugene Talmadge's State Democratic executive committee.

The first information on differences within the committee came from Chairman Hugh Howell, of the Talmadge-controlled organization, having charge of party affairs in Georgia.

Howell, in a latter to committee members, warned 100 per cent Talmadgeites against attending a meeting in Atlanta November 29—the date of the Roosevelt "homecoming" celebration—called by Judge Newt Morris Marietta, a member of Howell's group.

Talmadge Not Invited.

"No one could possibly object," Howell wrote, "to any member of the State Democratic committee being present at this meeting, but I desire to inform you that it is wholly an anti-Talmadge meeting, to which neither the Governor nor I have been invited, nor would we go if we were invited."

Howell said it wasn't an official meeting of the committee, but he intended to call a gathering of the organization "in the near future" to take up the question of whether "we shall have a presidential preferential primary or not," if so, to fix the primary date.

Informed of Howell's letter, Judge Morris said he personally sent out letters to most of the approximately 125 members of the committee, asking them to meet him for breakfast and talk over the political situation in Georgia.

He said he told committee members he had come to the conclusion Gov. Talmadge was planning to have the committee select delegates to the Democratic National Convention, in charge of Talmadge as national committeeman, rather than hold a Presidential preferential primary.

Morris said he wanted to band together Roosevelt supporters on the committee, get them to agree to stand solidly for a primary and if the majority of the committee outvoted them to hold another meeting and call a primary "regardless."

"The Roosevelt people on the committee," Judge Morris said, "must stand together to assure the people of Georgia the opportunity to vote on their preference for President on the Democratic ticket."

Rockville Ousts Policeman Who Tagged Judge

'Economy,' Says One Official; Patrolman Was Scourge of Car Parkers.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
Telephone Shepherd 2363.

Leslie Thompson, Rockville's town police force, whose tilt with Judge Harold C. Smith, of the county police court, over a parking summons was "front-page news" more than a month ago, yesterday was dismissed by the Rockville Town Council.

Policeman Thompson, whose activities made the curbs along Rockville's main street a "No Auto Land," plodded about his business of sticking summonses on windshields while the entire county rocked after his tagging of the judge's automobile.

Diplomatic relations between the town council and the judge were strained, and the case was before Gov. Nice when the judge finally announced he had not been properly served and would be delighted to post the $3.50 if proper service was made. Judge Smith and Thompson shook hands in public and called off the feud.

News of Thompson's dismissal spread like wildfire through Rockville yesterday. One councilman said he had not been present at the meeting, but that he believed the dismissal was an economy measure, because "some of the councilmen did not think a full-time policeman necessary."

Another councilman declared the reason to be "because he wasn't attending to his business."

F. Bache Abert, town clerk, referred inquirers to council members. Mayor D. M. Blandford wasn't available for a statement, and neither was Thompson. Council members said the county commissioners had agreed to assign a county policeman to patrol the town.

Regulations forbidding beer sale licenses to establishments situated within 300 feet of the nearest boundary of any "public, private or parochial school, or any church synagogue or other place of worship unless the consent in writing of such institution is first obtained," were adopted yesterday by the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board, meeting at Silver Spring Dispensary Building.

The new rule became effective at once, but will not be retroactive.

The board suspended the license of John M. Trevey, of Gaithersburg, for four days, for failing to cancel stamps on beer cases. It also ordered him to install adequate sanitary facilities. Other charges against him were dismissed. The Northwestern Hunt Club, Four Corners, operated by Julian W. Bieber, was cited to show cause, December 9, why its license should not be suspended or revoked on charges of selling to intoxicated persons. Dorsey A. Ellin, operator of Pop Ellin's Lunch, Silver Spring, was cited on similar charges, the hearing to be at 3:30 p. m. December 9.

The board dismissed a citation against Andrew Archer, Sligo Hills Market, charged with not being owner of the business for which a license was issued.

It was announced that the formal opening of the new Rockville dispensary will be held Friday and Saturday. J. Oscar Foulk, general manager, reported the dispensary system shows an increase of 2,359.78 in sales last week over the same week last year.

Mrs. Austin LaMar was re-elected president of the Auxiliary of the Sandy Spring Volunteer Fire Department at a meeting last night in the firehouse. Other officers are Mrs. Spencer J. H. Brown, vice president; Mrs. Roy Davis, recording secretary; Miss Alice McReynolds, corresponding secretary, and Miss Sallie P. Brooke, treasurer.

Fourteen new members were elected and the group voted to renew the $1,000 accident insurance carried on the firemen. No benefit luncheon will be held by the auxiliary until the last Friday in January.

The Montgomery County 4-H Senior Council will meet tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the home of Miss Barbara Frazier at Gaithersburg, Md., it was announced yesterday by Miss Anna Stiles, secretary.

Fairfax Holds Fourth Person In Brush Case

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Alexandria 43-F-31.

The arrest of a fourth person in connection with the slaying of Truman Brush, aged recluse near Falls Church last August, was announced yesterday by Sheriff E. P. Kirby, of Fairfax County.

Sam Thornton, 60, colored, of the Cherry Hill section of Georgetown, was arrested by the Washington police at the request of Sheriff Kirby. He is being held in the Fairfax County Jail on a murder charge.

Sheriff Kirby said yesterday that he was acting on information furnished by Henry Edwards, colored, who, with Hugh Hummer, is being held in the county jail awaiting trial on murder and robbery indictments in connection with the slaying.

According to an alleged confession obtained by Sheriff Kirby, Detective Sergt. John T. Wise, of Washington, and Mayor L. P. Daniel, of Falls Church, the trio waylaid the aged farmer on August 23 and beat him to death in an effort to obtain money believed to be hidden in the Brush home. It is said that Edwards sought the aid of Thornton at the request of Hummer to assist in the robbery. Police have repeatedly questioned Hummer, who denies taking any part in the crime.

Thornton was questioned by police Sunday night and yesterday. Sheriff Kirby would not make public the information, but said he believed it would help in clearing up the case.

Hummer's wife was arrested with her husband some time ago and is held, but no indictment has been sought against her.

Mrs. Alfred Leigh has been elected president of Kenmore Home Demonstration Club for the coming year. Other officers elected were Mrs. Russell Oliver, vice president; Mrs. A. L. Leigh, secretary and treasurer. Leaders of the club will be Mrs. Leigh, Mrs. G. Ashley Money and Mrs. Alfred Leigh.

A fiddlers' contest will be held in the town hall at Vienna, Va., tonight under the direction of Walter E. Thompson. Several of the three-piece orchestras that play in Fairfax County for dances have developed much friendly rivalry and the contest is being held to select a winner.

The contest will be in two parts. First the three pieces, fiddle, banjo and guitar, will play together, then the fiddler will be heard alone. The contest is open to the public and no admission charge will be made. Following the contest those in charge will decide whether to hold a dance-calling contest.

Officers of the Fairview 4-H Club at Fairfax Station have been elected as follows: Audrey Wells, president; Elizabeth Riggles, vice president; Doris Steele, secretary-treasurer; Frances Riggles, reporter; Rachel Goodspeed, song leader, and Bernice Riggles, recreation leader. Zoe Patterson Is Feted By the Swiss Minister Daughter of Cuban Ambassador, Other Young Guests Entertained at Tea; Embassy Nuptials Set for December 16.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Swiss Legation is one of the most charming official residences in Washington, and yesterday afternoon the Minister and Mme. Peter entertained there at tea in honor of Senorita Zoe Patterson, daughter of the Cuban Ambassador, Senor Don Guillermo Patterson, and her fiance, Mr. Ernest Schlatter, attache of the Legation of Switzerland, whose marriage will take place on December 16.

It was an informal party for younger members of the Diplomatic Corps and a few additional guests. The Minister and Mme. Peter have been in Washington for many years and are most popular. The legation on Kalorama Circle is homelike and attractive, with a number of interesting things in the drawing and dining rooms. One small sitting room, which the Minister calls his Swiss room, is entirely furnished with things made in his country; handsome chairs of fine wood, cabinets containing beautiful china, pottery and glassware, as well as pictures painted by Swiss artists.

In the drawing room, deep-red draperies lend a warm note of color to the room, and here again the walls are decorated with oil paintings and water colors by well-known Swiss painters. In the dining room there are pale green walls, soft lights and several beautiful cabinets containing rare pieces of crystal and glass.

The host and hostess received their young guests in the drawing room, Mme. Peter wearing a frock fashioned with a skirt of black crepe, and a blouse of creamy white lace, designed with brief sleeves and a square neckline. Senorita Patterson wore a frock of electric blue crepe trimmed with a knot of silver kid flowers and a belt of the same, and a soft black velvet hat. The Ambassador, father of the bride-elect, arrived later with Senorita Olga Patterson, his younger daughter, who wore a frock of bronze lame made with long sleeves and a close neckline. She wore a small hat of black velvet trimmed with brilliant feathers.

Embassy Ceremony.

The wedding will take place in the embassy, where an improvised altar will be placed in the conservatory, with the guests seated in the ballroom. Senorita Patterson will have as her attendants, her sister, Senorita Olga Patterson; Senoritas Marta, Graciela and Rebecca Trucco, daughters of the Chilean Ambassador, and Senorita Ema Gaete, niece of the Chilean Ambassador. The Minister of Switzerland, Mr. Peter, will be best man for Mr. Schlatter. There will be a reception in the embassy after the ceremony, at which Mme. Schlatter-Roll, mother of the bridegroom-elect will receive with the Ambassador and the young couple. Mme. Schlatter-Roll will arrive shortly from her home in Switzerland for the occasion.

Yesterday afternoon there was a very gay group at the tea, for the young members of the diplomatic corps are very friendly with each other, and have always much conversation and joking to exchange. At the tea table, a number of guests alternated during the afternoon, and among those who were pouring were Mme. Florescu, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Rumania, who wore a smart gown of dark blue satin and crepe with a hat of felt the same shade; Senora de Baron, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, who wore black satin with an off-the-face hat of black felt; Senorita Marta Trucco, who was in moss green crepe, studded with gilt embroidery and a small hat to match; Mme. Walravens, wife of the Attache of the Belgian Embassy, who wore black crepe, with a jaunty hat of black velvet, and several others.

Mrs. Ridgely Present.

Among the guests were Mrs. William Barrett Ridgely, Mr. Oscar T. Crosby, of Warrenton, Va., and his daughter, Mrs. Crosby Miller; the Charge d'Affaires of Spain and Senora de Yrujo, the latter in a black gown and hat, with a handsome mink coat; the Marchioness Rossi Longhi, wife of the Counselor of the Italian Embassy; Mlle. Marie Therese de Laboulaye, daughter of the Ambassdar of France and Mme. de Laboulaye; the second Secretary of the French Embassy, M. Claude de Boisanger; the third Secretary of the Embassy and Countess de Leusse, who soon will leave to sail for Europe, where the Count de Leusse will assume his new duties at the French Legation in Vienna; the Attache of the Embassy and Mme. Saint, who have just returned from a sojourn of several weeks in Europe; Frau Scholz, wife of the first Secretary of the German Embassy, who has had a busy week-end with her guests, the Count and Countess Casteja, who stopped briefly in Washington before sailing for Jamaica, where they will spend the winter months. Countess de Casteja is the daughter of the Hon. Mrs. Reginald Fellowes, international hostess, who is noted as the best-dressed woman in Europe.

Others were the Second Secretary of the Spanish Embassy, Senor Don Ramon Padilla; the Second Secretary of the Belgian Embassy, Baron Antoine Beyens; the Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Baroness Beck-Friis, with their daughter, Miss Christine Beck-Friis; Mr. Stig Unger, attache of the Swedish Legation; the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Boncesco, Miss Sibilla Skidelsky, daughter of Mme. de Bianchi, wife of the Minister of Portugal; Jonkheer H. M. van der Wyck, attache of the Netherlands Legation; Mr. Francis Irgens, secretary of the Norwegian Legation; Miss Vera Bloom and Mrs. Georges Sommaripa.

Beauty Package Does Wonders For the Hands

Lanolin Soap, Cream and Newly Patented Gloves Are Included.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HANDS are natural telltales. You do not need to know your palmistry to read many of their messages. If they are rough, red and obviously neglected they say plainly that romance is dormant. They make no bones about saying you're past the thirty — forty— or fifty mark.

But what a different tale smooth, white hands tell! They speak of romance and beauty. They plainly proclaim that here is a woman of distinction, a person to be admired.

The way to soft and lovely hands is simple and direct, as pointed out by a certain hand-beauty house. They offer a package which includes the few essentials every woman needs regardless of age or the type of work she does. If her routine includes chores like dishwashing or tedious office work, the hand-beauty package will prove doubly valuable.

It includes a remarkable lanolin soap, a jar of hand cream made of olive and almond oil, and some newly patented frosted finger beauty gloves.

The hand cream is a modern scientific product based on effective beauty principles. Blended into its rich soothing texture are balms and healing lubricants which quickly penetrate the skin and banish chap, soreness, roughness and redness. It may be used also on the elbows and arms, for the cuticle and nails, for windburn, as in after-shave cream, and for tired, aching feet.

The gloves are an assured hand protection whenever you've a chore such as dusting and dishwashing. The frosting process assures a firm grip on objects you hande even when the gloves are wet. They are made of a soft, lightweight rose-pink latex.

The soap has been especially created to protect hand skin, cleansing it thoroughly without removing the natural oils. It is bland and easy on the skin. Its lanolin content (extracted from the wool of sheep) replaces natural oils the skin may lose through exposure.

Five-Year Diaries.

YOU CAN keep a check on time, preserve intriguing memories, and record your activities briefly if you own one of the attractive—and convenient—five-year diaries selling for a nominal sum in the gift section of a local store.

These small books are bound in genuine leather, indexed, and fastened with lock and key, the better to guard your secrets. One of them will make an ideal gift for some girl in her exciting teens, or for the daughter at college.

Price—$1.

39-Cent Gift Suggestions.

ON THE 39-cent table (located on the first floor of a downtown store) you'll be fascinated with the numerous interesting gifts suggestions selling for this modest sum.

The variety is amazing. There a child's napkin ring and drinking cup, salt and pepper shakers, bookends, candy and nut dishes, cigarette boxes, tray and coaster sets, candlesticks, perfume atomizers, a carving set and a group of four straw hot plate mats.

Nearly every day the assortment of items is changed a bit, so here's your spot where shopping never grows monotonous nor exceeds your budget limitations.

Wooden Back Scrapbooks.

SCRAPBOOKS are mighty handy things to have around. The hundreds of odd clippings and snap shots that inevitably accumulate in desks and table drawers are often lost and torn unless they're kept in a secure place. And here's where the scrapbook answers the purpose.

A local store is showing some that are most attractive. They have stiff wooden backs that will protect them from bending and tearing. The leaves are long and wide, quite ample for innumerable clippings and pictures.

If you're looking for an unusual present for someone, why not one of these?

Returns to Parliament

MISS MEGAN LLOYD-GEORGE.

British Elect Only 9 Women To Parliament

15 Out of 62 Successful in House of Commons Races in 1931.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Westminster was assured of the feminine touch by Britain's election, but the touch will be lighter than in the last House of Commons.

Only nine of the 60 women candidates obtained seats. In 1931 15 out of 62 were successful. The line-up for the next session will be 6 Conservatives, 1 Laborite, 1 Independent and 1 Independent Liberal.

A feature of this year' voting was the campaign of woman against woman.

In the Kinross and western division of Perth and Kinross the Duchess of Atholl, Conservative, retained her seat by defeating Mrs. C. L. MacDonald, Liberal. Miss Irene Ward held Wallsend for the Conservatives against Margaret Bondfield, the Labor campaigner.

Miss Ward's election, the American-born Viscountess Astor's success in Plymouth Sutton and the victory of Miss Florence Horsbrugh in Dundee were recorded. Miss Eleanor Rathbone already had received an acclamation in the English combined universities.

Besides the Duchess of Atholl's triumph, four others emerged from the ballot-counting. Miss Thelma Gazalet, Conservative, was re-elected in Islington East, a London borough, defeating a Liberal and a Laborite. Miss Ellen Wilkinson, whose name is legendary in labor's ranks, redeemed Durham Jarrow for her party. Mrs. H. Tate, Conservative, won in Somerset Frome and in Angkesey Miss Megan Lloyd George was returned.

Except for Miss Wilkinson, all sat in the last House. She was a member of the one before that.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

What to Do About Middle-Aged Men Is "Great Problem" of This Girl.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a young girl alone in Washington and working hard for a living. At the place where I am employed I come in contact with all kinds of people. My great problem is what to do about the middle-age men. Most of these men have gray hair, wives and children. But still they flirt with girls and expect to make dates with them.

• • • •

It is necessary for me to be polite and courteous in order to hold my job. But how can I do this and yet make these old fools know their place? If you just smile at these men, it's surprising how silly they act. Please tell me how I can retain their respect and patronage and yet keep them in their place?

• • • •

I have a steady boy friend and I am not taking any chances with these men who seem old enough to know better. My girl friend goes around with a married man and doesn't think she is doing wrong. I feel she is wasting her time and will eventually get into trouble. All she thinks about is the gifts and the good times he gives her. Thanking you for any advice you can give me, I am, respectfully,

LOUISE.

Proverbs Yield Wisdom.

DEAR LOUISE: There is an old saying to the effect that a man is known by the company he keeps; another to the effect that birds of a feather flock together; and still another to the effect that one cannot touch pitch without being defiled. There is a wealth of cynical and worldly wisdom packed away in these old proverbs which I call to your attention.

• • • •

Perhaps it isn't your dazzling smile which provokes unseemly advances from middle-aged men with gray hair, wives and children. Perhaps it is their knowledge of the fact that your best girl friend "goes around with a married man and doesn't think she is doing wrong." Perhaps they judge you by the company you keep in her; perhaps they assume you are birds of a feather.

• • • •

My advice to you, as a young girl entirely on her own in Washington, is to select your woman friends more carefully, and to rid your mind of the notion that all middle-aged men are faun-like fools intent on forcing their ardent attentions on reluctant young women. It's a simple matter for any intelligent woman to keep any man at arm's length. Let her treat him with respect and deference; let her cultivate that casual dignity of manner which is blended of poise and reserve; and if he insists on giving the conversation a personal turn, let her guide it into channels leading to an admiring discussion of the remarkable qualities of his wife and children, and of himself as an exemplary husband and father.

Children Need Help in Choice Of Literature

Reading Should Be Made Pleasurable to Arouse Interest in Classics.

By Lenore K. Bartlett.

BOOK WEEK, like all other such occasions, merely gives us a chance to check up on ourselves and see how nearly we have been doing during the balance of the year what we are supposed to do. This week we should give particular attention to books for our children.

Reading is a dominant influence in the lives of all of us and especially in the lives of children. It does something to the mind and the personality of the individual, influencing not only his thinking but often "carrying over" into his conduct and his experience. For this reason great care should be exercised in the choice of reading material for our children.

In the first experiencing books the young child enjoys pointing to objects with which he is familiar, such as "hill, pail, tree," etc. The next step involves the relationship of objects with action in the story form. Books for the young child are just coming into their own and there are now on the market any number of splendid books, well illustrated, which deal with life situations within the limited experience of the young child. The story of the farm, the postman, the fireboat, the tugboat, trains, the milkman, airplanes and the like are factual subjects suitable for this early age.

Beginning of Pleasure.

The beginning of real pleasure from reading, other than for factual knowledge probably begins in the delight of the child for rhyme and rhythm. This is the start of an appreciation of the charm of the words themselves and for the style of the author. Mother Goose is typical of this early appreciation of literature. Alice in Wonderland, Kiplings Jungle Books and Robin Hood typify successive steps in the growth of this phase of reading.

While parents and teachers should not urge reading too early, yet an interest in it may be encouraged by story telling and reading to the child. One mother I know read Pinnochio to her 6-year-old. The child became so interested in the pranks of this fanciful character, that she was able to tell her mother each night just where they left off the previous evening.

Questions Arouse Interest.

A junior high school teacher aroused the interest of her class in reading by preparing a number of questions such as "Did you know that 18 baby possums can be held in a teaspoon?" These children were immediately interested, their curiosity was aroused and they wanted to know where they could verify this statement. The teacher referred them to a certain issue of Nature Magazine where they found out that possums were born in the larva stage.

We must make reading pleasurable to children all along the line if we hope to arouse a positive response to the gems of literature later on. There is no forcing children is interesting to them and classics before they are ready to accept and appreciate them. Be sure that the material given young children is intersting to them and within their grasp. This is where interest begins and should continue to grow if properly guided.

Wide Scope of Training At Girls' Colleges Noted

servatism. n o In women's colleges today the pendulum is swinging back to conservatism. Drinking, smoking and other disciplinary difficulties that once worried presidents and deans are diminishing in number and are solved by students themselves, reports Mrs. Ben Allen, of Mills College, Oakland, Calif.

Harris & Ewing.

Mrs. Ben Allen, Dean of Residents at Coast Institution, Says Students Are Swinging Back to Conservatism.

SOCIAL amenities were of prime importance in college curricula back in the crinoline days when the first female seminaries flourished. When grandmother went to college she was taught chiefly how to hold a tea cup, how to introduce one guest to another and how to preside at a dinner table.

Later, girls grew more practical and learned how to cook and sew, along with their liberal arts courses. Later, still, career-minded women went in for courses popular with men students. Preparing themselves for positions men had always occupied, women began studying Government, economics, international law, and psychology. For a time, home economics courses were taken only by women who expected to teach or to marry.

Now, however, the college girl is developing herself along a number of lines. Not being sure of what the future will hold for her, she makes the most of every day spent in college. She prepares herself for some definite line of work, yet does not neglect domestic training nor the social amenities.

Many Study Home Management.

These are some observations of Mrs. Ben Allen, dean of residents and social director of Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

"Girls are taking advantage of every opportunity they can in college today," she said yesterday. "The study foreign languages, history, government and economics, but most of them also find time to take a course or two in home economics. Courses in home and institutional management are becoming increasingly popular."

She pointed out, however, that the swing to highly practical studies was being nicely balanced with a renewed interest in charm development. "Our required course in speech is a valuable aid along this line," she said. "Proper walking, an asset to poise, is taught in the physical education courses."

Discussing disciplinary problems of college girls, Mrs. Allen observed, "The pendulum is swinging back to conservatism, and the students themselves are solving their own difficulties without interference from college officials. Drinking, no longer considered smart by college girls, is not a problem now. And, although there are restricted places on our campus where girls can smoke, a recent survey revealed there are fewer students who smoke in our present freshman class than there have been in any freshman class the last ten years."

Variety of Experiences.

Mrs. Allen also mentioned that "there is no such thing as social snobbery" in the college with which she is associated. "There are no sororities, no social clubs, and som of the most popular students on the campus are waitresses," she averred.

Mrs. Allen, herself a graduate of Mills College, had a variety of experiences between the time she finished and returned there as dean of residents. For a time she was a newspaperwoman and editor. Later she spent two years in Washington, where her husband assisted Mr. Hoover in the food conservation project; and she and her husband lived seven years in England, where he was London representative of the Associated Press. Writing under the name of Victoria French Allen, she recently completed a book, "The Outside Man," based on the latter experience.

Brains Defeat Beauty In College Girls' Poll

College girls believe brains more important than beauty, a survey of Barnard College freshmen indicates. Out of 95 girls questioned by the Bulletin, college publication, 53 said they would prefer a Phi Beta Kappa key to being "siren of the stag line." Only three admitted their goal was social popularity. Ten said they would work for both popularity and honors and eight said they would strive to strike a happy medium. Others were noncommittal.

Drawing Maps Is Worth-While Child's Game

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

TO A SAVAGE a map probably would be incomprehensible. In the same way it is incomprehensible to a little child. A map is really a short-hand drawing, and unless one knows the conventions of map language it is useless.

It is possible, however, to teach the use of maps to very little children, and the teaching process may be made a delightful game for rainy days.

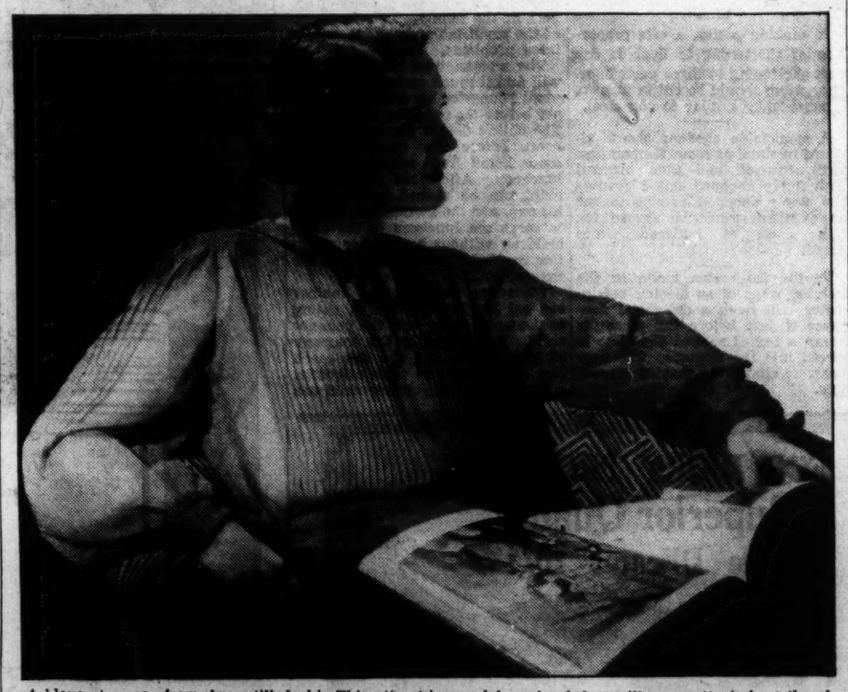
When Sally and Harry are completely at a loss for something to do, mother might produce two large pieces of wrapping paper, some pencils and maybe some colored chalk or crayon. Tell the children to pretend that they are flies on the ceiling and ask them to draw a picture of the room they are in from the fly's viewpoint, putting in all the furniture.

When they have learned to do this, perhaps some other day of boredom take them further afield and let them be birds near the house. They can draw a picture of the roads and paths near home. Next time they can go by airplane, and so increase their radius. They will make mistakes, and their first efforts will be crude, but all the time they are quite unconsciously learning the language of maps.

All the teaching that they need is occasional suggestions rather than direct correction. "Is that chair nearer the door than the table?" "Why not pace the distance out?" "Could a fly, looking down from the ceiling, see the legs of that chair?"

These experiments should be made on a large scale for the sake of the child's eye. The average small-scale map is very trying to eyesight, especially to that of little children whose eyes are not yet adjusted to close and particular vision for any considerable period.

Blouse Now Costume in Own Right



A blouse to wear from dawn till dusk! This attract ive model, made of sheer silk georgette, is for tailored suits or dress occasions. It comes in fascinating shades of green, blue and red. You may buy it in a local store. Call The Post Fashion Editor.

TIME was when a blouse was "anything to wear under a jacket." Now, however, it has stepped out of its obscurity and is appearing at gay social functions with slim skirts of silk, satin, wool or velvet, as a costume in its own right.

Blouses worn without suits under fox or mink capes for theater, night clubs or the cinema are a smart new note. They are worn without hats, or with absurd little evening hats that are mere twists or dabs of silk tulle, silk lame or silk velvet.

For luncheon in a smart restaurant or for afternoon tea, there is nothing more flattering than a blouse of luscious silk satin, softly draped or shirred at the shoulders and bodice, and with a new version of the high cowl neckline. These blouses can be worn with a dressy suit of black woolen or black silk velvet, or under a fur or cloth coat, with a skirt of silk satin. They are smart with ankle length skirts for "little dinners," at home or cocktail parties.

The sheer silk blouse, new this fall, is attracting favorable attention from women. It can be worn with a dark woolen or tweed suit or as a separate costume with a contrasting skirt. Silk chiffons and silk georgettes are the featured fabrics. Fine pleating or tucking on bodice or sleeves, shirring around yokes or under necklines, give such blouses softness and femininity to counteract their simple lines.

The tailored blouse for sports wear or with a tailored suit is done in varied moods. There are youthful blouses of soft silk crepes in pastel colors, with simple club collars and perky bows for trimming, grand for wear with plaid woolen skirts or with tweed suits. Then there are shirtwaist blouses of delicate silk crepe de chine, with jabots and frills trimmed with fine lace, perfect to wear with a perfectly tailored suit.

Colors are new this season, too. Gold and silver vie for favor in metals. Strong blues and reds and greens are favorites in less formal blouses of satins and chiffons. The dusty pastels or strong vivid tones both register for tailored blouses. And, of course, classic white is as strong as ever.

The blouse provides the color accent for the ensemble, sounding the basic note of the costume, which makes it more than just a costume accessory.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE ARE ALWAYS fluttered and flattered when smart young bachelors seek our advice about their sleek young apartments. Of course they always insist that they only happened to read our column by accident on the way to the sports page—nevertheless they did read it!

• • • •

One young sportsman wants something "as nice as the woods during the hunting season." He has a collection of old guns, a stuffed mallard, a moose head and a rare fish—his most cherished belongings. But what furniture, furniture coverings, floor covering and draperies would go with them? We would suggest furniture of rather simple lines, then soft beige walls and a plain green waxed linoleum floor. Lamps with copper bases and hunting prints for pictures and the guns and stuffed affairs on the walls. The sofa we'd have covered in a mixed tweed predominantly cinnamon color . . . and one chair in a loud golf knicker check suiting, and another in khaki colored corduroy with green welting.

• • • •

Another bachelor has a preplexing problem. One corner of his apartment living room has a perfectly useless and very much in the way swinging door leading into the dinette. So, asks the bachelor, would it be all right to hang a tapestry or printed fabric from a rod across the top of the doorway and place a radio cabinet against it? In a room with a sage-green broadloom rug and chairs and sofa in tones of rust and green, what color would be best for the changings? A figured material we'd say . . . possibly an India print in colors that will harmonize with the other shades in the room. Or an interesting piece of chintz would be delightful in just the right pattern and colorings.

Code for Soldiers' Wives, Sweethearts

Ten commandments to Italian women whose husbands and sweethearts are on the Ethiopian front have appeared in the newspaper Il Giornale d'Italia, semiofficial mouthpiece of Mussolini, the United Press reports. The commandments, signed with the nom de plume "Benedetta," wife of a member of the cabinet, follows:

1. Be faithful in separation.
2. Remain sweet and serene in order to conquer the desperation of separation.
3. Carry on where your men-folks left off.
4. Give unstintingly your arms and brains to fill the voids in the field of industry.
5. Practice rigid economic self-discipline.
6. Live an austere and simple life.
7. Freely assist the sick, feeble and tired.
8. Be proud of your motherhood in spite of the separation.
9. Maintain faith in our victory.
10. Cast away all doubts.

Mental Upsets Among Youths Are Common

Psychoses Assert Themselves After Failure to Accept Thwarted Ambitions.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

AS SOON as we begin to reason and to think for ourselves life becomes realistic. We subconsciously inaugurate a series of adjustments of likes, dislikes, fears, joys, and desires. Some persons adapt themselves more readily than others. There comes a time in the lives of most of us when we struggle to dominate somebody—father, mother, or a younger brother or sister. Later we mingle with people and form friendships; we share in a very definite way in their successes as well as in their disappointments.

Between the ages of 15 and 20 youth comes into its own, filled with idealism and ambition, and dominated by the principles of truth, honor, integrity, patriotism, respect for law, etc. Boys and girls in high school and college are dreaming dreams and painting colorful pictures of life as they would wish it to be.

Then comes reality. Dishonesty appears instead of honesty, falsehood replaces truth, a trusted friend betrays a confidence. What a shock to idealism! Some are prepared to meet these mental blows and they adapt themselves with facility; a shrug of the shoulders and the search for an honest friend to replace the one who proved unworthy. These emotional shocks constitute injuries to the mind—the sensibilities—as definite as a crushing injury to an arm or a leg.

Life is a complicated process. We are all bound up in a struggle for existence and in ordering our acts and thoughts in a way that will bring us the greatest amount of happiness. We want to be successful, to have homes, to be popular, to possess friends—in other words, to live. When any one of these ambitions is thwarted or defeated, when the foundations of our beings are swept from under us, psychoses may assert themselves.

We can train children to meet the problems of life with which they are bound to be faced by teaching independence, self-reliance, and a certain amount of intellectual and emotional bravery; to subjugate oversensitiveness. We can do this at the very time that we are guarding the child against disorders of nutrition, infectious diseases, and toxins.

Simple Rules Govern Mixing Of Fruit Cake

They Should Be Baked at a Temperature of 250 to 275 Degrees.

THOUGH a fruit cake is usually judged the most difficult cake to bake it may be made quite simple even for a novice if a definite plan of procedure is carried out.

Preparing the ingredients for a fruit cake takes more time than for an ordinary cake, and the time spent in the kitchen will run into several hours not including the mixing or baking time. The woman who does not have an entire morning or afternoon to devote to baking her holiday cake can plan to do the work in two units. The fruit, peels and nuts can be cut in fine pieces one day and the mixing and baking of the cake can be done the following day.

Gather together all the ingredients. Wash the raisins and currants well, dry and weigh them, and wrap each in separate waxed paper packages. Shell nuts, blanch them when necessary and cut them in small pieces if desired. Wrap these in wax paper. Cut fruit (candied cherries, pineapple, etc.) in fine pieces and wrap each in separate wax packages. Do the same with citron, lemon, grapefruit and orange peel. Sift flour, measure or weigh it and sift with measured spices. Set aside in a flat pan or wrap in waxed paper. Measure sugar, sift if required, and wrap in waxed paper. Measure butter and return to refrigerator in covered container. Liquids should be assembled at the same time, but can be measured the day the cake is to be mixed.

Mixing Is Simple Procedure.

Mixing the cake the following day then will be a simple procedure. If you have had difficulty in previous years with the fruit falling to the bottom of the cake, reserve some of the flour and dredge fruit and nuts with it before adding to the cake batter.

Before mixing the batter collect pans in which the cake is to be baked. Grease each pan and line each with heavy white or brown paper. Grease paper lining and have pans within easy reach of point where cake is to be mixed.

Select a large mixing bowl with a rounded bottom for mixing the cake. A large wooden spoon is the best kitchen tool for mixing the batter.

All fruit cakes must be baked at a low temperature and the temperature must remain constant throughout the baking. Some recipes will call for a slight rise in oven temperature during the last hour or half hour of baking. If you have no oven thermometer test the oven for temperature by using the flour test. Flour sprinkled over the surface of a flat pan should become a light golden brown in 5 minutes in an oven that is slow or 250 degrees to 350 degrees F; 250 degrees to 275 degrees F. is the usual temperature for baking fruit cake.

Keeping qualities depend upon the correct baking temperature. The cake must be baked slowly enough to allow the heat to penetrate to the very heart of the cake. If the oven is too hot the cake will bake to rapidly on the outside, forming a crust through which the heat will not readily penetrate to the center of the cake. This cake, therefore, will be dry and overly brown on the outside and so moist on the inside as to be unattractive. The cake because it is not thoroughly baked near the center will mold rather quickly.

After baking the cake should be turned out an a rack to cool before storing. It should then be wrapped in a cloth sprayed with rum or brandy and stored in a covered tin box to keep it moist. More brandy or rum may be sprayed in the cloth as the cloth becomes dry. Those who do not like this method of ripening fruit cake will find that cake stored in a covered tin box will keep moist if an apple is placed in the box with the cake. When the apple starts to become soft, it should be replaced by a fresh one.

Mrs. Purvis' Entry Provides a 5-Pound Cake at Cost of $1.50.

THE hundreds of interesting fruit cake recipes submitted last week in The Post's recipe contest made it difficult to select the five that were to be awarded the weekly prizes of $1 each. It was decided, therefore, to include one dark and one white fruit cake, an inexpensive cake made in smaller quantity than usual, an uncooked cake, and a Southern version.

The five prize winning recipes will be submitted with the previous winners in this series of six contests for the final judging which is to determine the winners of the three grand prizes—a hand-carved wooden salad bowl with matching serving fork and spoon, a combination cake server and box smartly styled of non-tarnishing chromium and white porcelain decorated with dashing red handles and knob, and a Dutch oven.

Inexpensive Fruit Cake.

½ pound butter
½ pound sugar
½ pound flour
6 eggs
½ pound seeded dates
¼ pound candied red cherries
¼ pound figs
¼ pound candied citron
¼ pound candied orange and lemon peel, mixed
1 pound seedless raisins
1 cup of nut meats
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 teaspoons ground nutmeg
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
2 ounces of wine or brandy

Cut fruit in small pieces and dust with a part of the flour. Cream butter and sugar together, add well beaten eggs. Mix flour with spices and add to the butter and egg mixture. Add brandy, then fruit. Mix well.

Line tube center pan with greased paper, pour in cake mixture and bake in a slow oven for about 1¼ hours. Before putting cake in oven the top may be decorated with strips of citron and slices of cherries if desired.

This recipe makes a delicious 5-pound cake for the small cost of $1.50. MRS. E. G. PURVIS.

Rich Fruit Cake.

¾ pound butter
1 pound brown sugar
8 eggs
2 pounds raisins
2 pounds currants
1 pound citron chopped very fine
½ cup molasses
½ ounce ground cloves
½ ounce ground cinnamon
¼ ounce ground mace
4 cups flour
1 wine glass sherry
1 wine glass brandy

Beat the butter and sugar until light and creamy; add the eggs thoroughly beaten, then the raisins (seeded) and currants well washed and dried. Chop the citron or pass through meat grinder, and add to other ingredients with the molasses and ground spices. Sift and add the flour and, lastly, stir in the sherry and the brandy. Bake in cake pans lined with two thicknesses of greased paper to protect the cake from too great heat. Bake very slowly about 4 hours.

Wrap the cake in a cloth soaked in rum and put in a tightly covered can to ripen. Soak the cloth whenever it dries out, and continue the process until the cake is to be served.

Cream butter to fluffiness, slowly add powdered sugar; beat well. Beat eggs, until light, add to butter and sugar, alternately with the flour and spices. Fold in floured fruits, peel and nuts. Fold in grape juice and cider or wine and brandy.

Spread a thick layer of dough in each paper lined loaf pan. Arrange some large citron pieces, whole almonds, walnut halves and a few cherries over this. Add rest of dough carefully, pouring each pan about three-fourths full. Arrange a design with sliced pineapple, candied cherries, halved dates, whole and shredded almonds over the top of each, pressing the same lightly into the dough. Let stand so the fruit will soften. Bake in a slow ovem (275 degrees F.) for 3½ hours. Cake must bake steadily, watch the oven so the heat won't go over or under the proper degree. At the end of 3 hours test cake to see if done. If no dough adheres to the tester cake is done.

Remove from oven and cover with heavy wax paper, turn upside down on cooling rack. If you cover the pans with a damp towel, the pans will loosen in two or three minutes. Turn cakes right side up to cool overnight. Pack the loaves in airtight containers with an apple in each, until holiday time. Pouring a little wine or brandy occasionally over the cakes will mellow them.

White Fruit Cake.

1½ cups granulated sugar
1 cup butter
2 tablespoons lemon juice
4 cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
¼ pound orange peel
¼ pound lemon peel
10 egg whites
2 rings natural crystallized pineapple
2 rings red crystallized pineapple
¼ Cup juice from canned white cherries
2 rings green crystallized pineapple
¼ cup juice from canned pineapple
½ pound green glazed cherries
½ pound red glazed cherries
1 pound blanched almonds (chopped)
½ pound very light colored citron
1 pound white seedless raisins

Wash raisins throughly and dry. Finely chop all peels and fruits. Sift flour once before measuring, then add salt baking powder and soda and sift three times. Carefully shake one cup of the flour over the prepared fruit and the chopped nuts. Sift sugar several times.

Cream the butter and add sugar, a little at a time, and cream thoroughly. Add lemon juice and beat well. Add pineapple and cherry juice alternately with the flour and beat well after each addition. Fold in the beaten egg whites and then the prepared fruit and nuts. Bake in a slow oven (250 degrees F.) for 2½ hours, then increase heat to 300 degrees F. and bake 30 minutes longer.

The success in making this cake lies in the baking. Line the pans with three or four thicknesses of white paper, well greased and sift flour about ¼ inch thick all over bottom of pans and then cover bottom with three or four thicknesses of well greased paper. Carefully dust inside of lined pan with flour before putting in the mixture. Cover top of pan with heavy paper until the last hour of the baking so cake will not get too brown.

The above recipe is my own creation after several years of experimenting with different recipes.

Finals on This Week In Recipe Contest

This week brings the last of a series of six recipe contests which have been conducted for Post food page readers. If you hope to have your recipe entered in the final judging for the three grand prizes to be awarded at the close of this contest and described elsewhere on this page, be sure to submit a recipe in this week's contest. Only recipes that have been awarded a weekly prize of $1 are eligible for a grand prize.

Five more women have an opportunity of winning a weekly award this week.

The subject of the contest—Christmas cookies — is timely and should be of interest to every woman who stocks her pantry shelves with holiday sweets each Christmas season.

Recipes should be sent to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post in time to reach this office not later than Saturday morning.

Name and address should be written plainly on each sheet. Failure to include the method of mixing and the temperature at which cookies are to be baked will give recipes less chance of winning a prize.

Fruit Puddings Of Many Types Can Be Served

Various Combinations Made With Mince Meat; Holiday Tarts Suggested.

Back in grandmother's time early fall days were mince-meat making days, and for long hours the spicy bubbling mass of fruits, suet and cider sent its aroma through the house. And then followed hot mince pies and steamed puddings and all the rest of those deliciously rich desserts.

You'll see few bubbling pots of mince meat any more, but mince pies haven't lost their popularity. That's because already prepared mince meat has been added to the list of time and labor-saving foods and making a mince meat pie nowadays is simply a matter of spooning it from the jar to the pie shell.

Delicious Blend of Ingredients.

The glass jars or cans of mince meat have a delicious blend of ingredients—raisins, currants, spices, suet and beef boiled down in cider to a perfect consistency.

There are many delicious dishes other than the customary pie to which this canned mince meat will lend its charm. A lemon gelatin dessert literally filled with mince meat and nuts makes an easy and delicious type of fruit pudding.

Then too, mince pie may have some interesting variations in combining mince meat with fresh cranberries, crushed pineapple or dried apricots for the usual filling. Serve these mince meat combination pies either hot or cold.

Interesting Dessert.

Apples cored and stuffed with mince meat, then baked, is another interesting way of serving a combination of fresh fruit and the canned mince meat.

Holiday tarts filled with a combination of cranberries and mince meat makes an interesting dessert. The tarts are quite filling and a small one is sufficient for each serving after the usual dinner. Because of their diminutive size tarts are often preferred to the larger serving of mince pie after a heavy meal.

Prepare the tarts by the following method:

Holiday Tarts.

Cook together 1 cup raw cranberries, ¼ cup sugar and ½ cup water until berries are soft. Add 1 cup mince meat, prepared for pie filling as directed on package.

Make pastry from 2 cups of pastry flour, 1 tablespoon salt, ½ cup lard or other shortening and 6 tablespoons ice water. Divide into small portions and roll out to fit individual pie pans. Cut off edges. Fill each with a large tablespoon fruit filling and top with pastry which has been cut in star shapes with cookie cutter. Bake at 400 degrees Fahreinheit for 20 minutes, or until pastry is crisp and light brown. Serve hot or cold. Makes eight tarts.

Household Hints

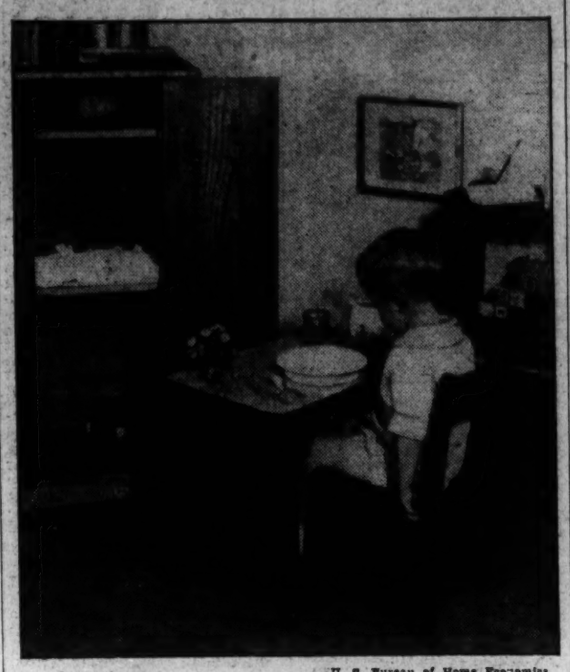
Before stuffing green peppers to bake, cut off the tops or cut them in two lenghtwise, and remove the inner fibers and seeds. Drop them into boiling water, remove from the fire, let stand 10 to 12 minutes and then drain.

In making pastry, a safe proportion of shortening to flour is one part shortening to three parts flour. Shortening should be cut in to make a consistency similar to cornmeal.

A spreadable cheddar cheese allowed to stand at room temperature until softened and then blended with finely chopped salted peanuts and finely chopped parsley makes an excellent sandwich spread for thin slices of buttered white bread.

Vanilla ice cream made in the freezing trays of an electric refrigerator will have a delightful new flavor if just before the cream is frozen a bar of shaved chocolate is stirred into the mixture. The new flavor is similar to that of roasted nuts.

Pre-School Age Child Should Have Own Table



U. S. Bureau of Home Economics.

The between high chair and school age youngster will be far more contented with his simple supper when seated at a little table of his own than when perched precariously on a dictionary topped chair and in full sight of the grown members' dinner table fare.

Meal Is Spoiled for Other Members of the Family When Youngster Cries for Food He Should Not Eat.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE IDEA of the small individual table for the youngster between high-chair and school age has solved many problems for the busy and harrassed mother.

A high chair has been found to be unsatisfactory for the child except when he is so small that he cannot comfortably sit in a chair without support. The chair is used to make him more comfortable while being fed. The difficulty appears when the youngster becomes a little older and is admitted to the family table by way of high chair to preside like a little king upon a throne over the family table.

It is only natural that a child whose meals are entirely different from those of the other members of the family should become dissatisfied with his own lot and demand something from the table. Refusal on the part of the mother to comply with the child's pleas often spoils the meal for the other members of the family because it upsets the child to the point of tears and jangles the mother's nerves. Complying with the whims of the child would be fatal to further disciplining of the child and upset the already developed eating habits.

The child when he graduates from the high chair is not ready for the family dinner table. In most cases the child is too small and must be seated upon a chair topped with cushions or a large book in order to comfortably reach his silver and plate. This makes a precarious position and one that isn't particularly conducive to good table manners.

The small table then is the answer to the problem of the child who has outgrown his high chair but is not old enough to occupy a place at the family table.

Many women have failed to see the advantage of the small table. They feel that serving a child from a separate table is too much work, it leaves the child too much out of the family circle, or it gives him little opportunity to develop table manners by observing other members of the family. In reality, use of the small table simplifies each of these problems.

The woman who has no servant will find it much easier to serve the small youngster his dinner and supper before the family meal is served. The child's dinner can be served at noon, before the other children come home from school for their luncheon. After his dinner the child can be tucked into bed for his nap, and the mother will be free to serve the luncheon to the older children without having her attention divided between them and the smaller child.

Whenever possible, the mother can eat her luncheon early, sitting at the small table with the younger child. He will enjoy the company of his mother, and she can coach him at this time in table etiquette.

Supper for the younger child can be served before the family dinner. This means that if for any reason the family's evening meal is to be delayed, the regular schedule of meals so necessary to the health of the small child need not be disturbed. The duty of putting the younger child to bed promptly at the same hour every evening can be turned over to the father as his first duty when he comes home. This will relieve the mother of one task and let her finish preparing the family dinner in leisurely style. The father will have a definite time each evening to get better acquainted with the youngest member of the family.

Date Surprise Sure to Please Bridge Guests

Ideal Refreshment to Serve to Players Arriving After Dinner.

THE custom of inviting guests for after dinner dessert before an evening of bridge was so popular last year that it is being continued this winter.

No doubt the idea was conceived by the busy woman who enjoyed entertaining a few friends in the evening, but hated the idea of bothering with refreshments late at night. The scheme was to invite her guests to partake of their dinner dessert after they arrived and then play bridge, thus eliminating the necessity of serving refreshments later on in the evening.

The early hour at which the refreshments are served makes it possible to have a richer and possibly a heavier dessert than would be served late in the evening. Coffee may accompany the dessert.

Any good plain cake recipe may be used as the foundation for the following dessert suggested for the before the evening bridge refreshment.

Date Surprise.

Bake the plain cake batter in a cake tin with a center tube or bake the batter in the form of cup cakes. Cover the outside of the large cake or the cup cakes with a plain white frosting. The centers of the cup cakes should be scooped out and saved for refrigerator cake or pudding. Fill the center of the large cake or the scooped-out cup cakes with the following date filling. Garnish with whipped cream and candied cherries.

Date Filling.

1 cup steamed and chopped dates
½ cup chopped walnuts
½ teaspoon vanilla
6 marshmallows cut in small pieces
1 cup sweetened whipped cream

Mix vanilla into whipped cream, and fold in other ingredients. Fill center of large cake or hollows of cup cakes. Garnish as suggested and serve with coffee.

Culbertson On Contract

Covering Honors.

When. and when not to cover an honor is one of the most troublesome problems of the game, even for good contract players. Their confusion is, in my opinion, largely based on the so-called bridge "aphorism," no more true than dozens of others equally misleading, that one always should "cover an honor with an honor."

To be helpful, a rule must have few exceptions. When the exceptions reach as great a number as the obervances, the rule is worthless.

The fact is that a player's intelligence must be invoked on each individual occasion. But before this can be done, a clear understanding must be reached as to the object involved in covering, or not covering, honors.

The object of covering is to promote to a winning position some other card held by the coverer, or his partner. Conversely, when no such promotion is possible, or likely, a cover should not be made.

To illustrate a standard situation:

NORTH

WEST ♠ 10 7 5 — EAST ♠ K 8 4

SOUTH
♠ A 6 3

If East covers the lead of the queen, all four cards in the suit can be cashed in by North-South. The ace wins the first trick, North's nine is finessed in the second round, the jack drops the eight and ten, and the deuce is perfectly good.

If East does not cover, the suit cannot be run without the loss of one trick. If North next leads the jack, the king covers and promotes West's ten to winning rank; if North leads a small card, the ace must be played by South, or the ten permitted to win the trick.

Making It Easy for Declarer.

Many a difficulty with which a declarer is faced is smoothed away by a defender who fails to recognize an obvious situation.

South, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

The bidding.

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 N T.	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠ [final bid]

Opening lead, diamond king by West.

South ruffed West's second diamond lead, and led the jack of spades. Here West made a fatal blunder—he put up the king. When an other ruff put declarer in the lead, he crossed to dummy's heart ace and finessed East's queen of trumps for a total of ten tricks, and contract.

Had West properly ducked the spade jack, the declarer would have had a difficult guess to make at a later stage. He could not know that West now held the unguarded king, and might well have played East for an original holding of both spade honors—particularly after West, on his first two leads, showed the ace and king of diamonds.

TODAY'S QUESTION.

Question: After a tour no trump slam try, may one sign off in the lowest ranking bid suit even without trump support?

Answer: Yes., Partner should be able to size up the situation, and if not satisfied with the contract, improve it by returning to another bid suit.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

CONTRIBUTIONS of employes to the retirement fund in the fiscal year 1932 (the last year for which figures are available) amounted to $31,517,286. As 3½ cents out of every payroll dollar must be deposited in the retirement fund, the amount deposited in the fund that year tends to show that the total pay roll for all employes subject to the act in the fiscal year 1932 was approximately $900,493,897.

BAKER.

In the same year the amount received for service credit payments was $385,419, and the total amount deposited in the fund by the employes was $31,852,705.

"Unfortunately," Ulrey J. Biller, retirement expert of the National Federation of Federal Employes, comments, "the amount received for service credits in 1933 and in 1934 is not known, but presumably the amount was not less than in 1934; and assuming that the service credit payments in 1933 and 1934 equaled those of 1932, the deductions from the salaries for these two years tend to show that the pay roll of the employes subject to retirement act in 1933 was approximately $39,000,000 less than in 1932."

By the same deductions Mr. Biller estimates it was about $89,000,000 less in 1934 than in 1932. A saving by the oGvernment on the pay roll of employes subject to the retirement act of approximately $128,000,000 is thus indicated for the years 1933 and 1934; that is when compared to the pay roll for 1932.

Manifestly, this saving was due largely to vacancies created by retirements and dismissals from service, and to furloughs and lower salaries paid new employes.

"The pay cut in force during these two years resulted in a further saving to the Government of about $191,000,000 more," Mr. Biller pointed out. "The total saving by the Government on the pay roll of the employes subject to the retirement act for these two years was approximately $319,000,000. This sum is equivalent to the salaries of nearly 80,000 employes at $2,000 for two years.

"The number of employes placed on the annuity rolls," Mr. Biller continued, "in the fiscal years 1933 and 1934 was 23,927. The number of refunds paid to those leaving service was 31,525 and probably 5,000 more died in service in this period, making a total turnover of about 60,000 in the two years. The Governments savings on the pay roll in 1933 and 1934 will probably equal its total cost of the retirement system for 20 years.

"Incidentally, it may be remarked that during these two years about 100,000 new employes came into the Government service who contributed nothing to the retirement fund. If all these new employes had been subject to the civil service restrictions the picture here presented would look different, and obviously several million more dollars would be in the retirement fund."

On The Air Today

SINCE Stoopnagle and Budd are parting company until after the first of the year (their Waring show contract having expired), the famous comedy team's following may be interested in their appearance this afternoon in Lois Long's "Town Topics," a sort of radio farewell, no doubt, until the 1936 reunion.

In the program today, Miss Long will interview the "Colonel and Budd."

Following the broadcast, F. Chase Taylor (Col. Stoopnagle to you) will leave for a transcontinental motor car tour—and a West Coast vacation.

For Budd, the temporary separation means a debut over the C. B. S. net next Saturday night in the triple capacity of band conductor, vocalist and master-of-ceremonies—a role which will be an old story for him. Not generally known is the fact that Budd Hulick directed a liner's orchestra back in 1928. And then, with his musicians, played an extended engagement at Van Beuren Bay, up Lake Erie way.

Following this, Budd sang regularly at WGR, Buffalo, in 1930 and 1931. Then Lemuel Q. Stoopnagle stepped into the picture, the comedy team was formed and Budd has since had no opportunity to indulge his fancy for band leading or singing—until the present vacation arrangement developed.

It looks now as though Budd and his band may go on a stage tour—and it seems quite certain that the Hulick Band will be used in the new program being built for the two comics after the first of the year.

Trolley Kills Man; City Toll 100 for Year

Victim Not Identified; Believed Baltimore Resident.

2 Washingtonians Die As Result of Crashes in the Suburbs.

Washington's 100th traffic victim of the year, a middle-aged man, was killed by a trolley car last night. At an early hour today police were still trying to identify him.

During the day two Washingtonians died from traffic accidents in the suburbs. The accident that caused the death of 22-year-old Miss Viola Margaret Bakka, of 1035 Thirteenth street northwest, occurred early yesterday when an automobile in which she was riding plunged down an embankment at the Potomac Yards bridge in Alexandria. It was the third time within 24 hours that a car had slid down that hill.

The year's 100th victim, locally, died when he sought to cross Pennsylvania avenue northwest diagonally at John Marshall place, according to the police. A trolley car coming east, operated by Motorman John Southworth, 59, of 1914 Sixth street northwest, hit him and by the time he was brought to Emergency Hospital, the pedestrian was dead of a skull fracture.

A letter in his pocket indicated he might be Harry Baldwin, of Baltimore. He was about 40 years old.

Southworth was released in custody of Capital Transit Co. authorities, pending an autopsy.

Pinned Under Car.

In the Alexandria accident, Miss Bakka was a passenger in a car driven by Dana G. Rogers, of New York City, which hurtled 25 feet down into the water. Miss Bakka was pinned under it in 8 inches of water. Alexandria Coroner Llewellyn Powell said the death resulted from the accident, the girl's chest having been crushed.

The other death was that of David Aitcheson, 24-year-old newspaper advertising solicitor, of 3806 Albemarle street northwest, who succumbed yesterday from injuries suffered in a collision near Weston, Md., early Sunday. In the same accident, Richard Farley, 23, of 26 T street northwest, was burned to death in the fire that followed the crash.

Others Hurt.

Victims in city accidents yesterday are:

Nannie Lawrence, 55, of 1331 D street northeast, who suffered skull injuries when the car in which she was riding collided with another at Ninth street and Massachusetts avenue northeast.

Richard J. Coffey, 80, of 1345 Girard street northwest, a pedestrian, who was treated at Casualty Hospital for leg injuries suffered when he was hit by a car at North Carolina avenue and A street southeast.

Margaret Middleberg, 20, of 401 Twenty-third street northwest, and Edward M. Lounsbay, 21, of 1819 F street northeast, who was cut and bruised when the car Lounsbay was driving was in collision with a street car at Louisiana and New Jersey avenues northwest. They were treated at Emergency Hospital.

Antino Bravo, 49, of Baltimore; Nick Caprio, 37, of 1112 Holbrook place northeast; and Milton S. Marshall, colored, 33, of 336½ M place southwest; who were treated at Providence Hospital for lacerations after a collision at Delaware avenue and Canal street southwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Dorsey, of Laurel, Md., were hurt when their car overturned in Laurel. Dorsey, secretary of the Laurel Building Association, suffered concussion of the brain and several rib fractures and his wife suffered a fracture of the nose. They were taken to Maryland General Hospital at Baltimore, by Dr. N. B. Steward, of Laurel, who administered first aid.

Idle Protest!

Nurse Balks at Job, but Sues for Relief Cash.

Justice Jennings Bailey last night took under advisement the contention that Helen Cage, unemployed nurse, was entitled to receive money from the Federal Emergency Relief Association regardless of whether she registered several weeks ago when direct relief was shut off.

Miss Cage filed suit because, after she declined to register as an employable, she was cut off the relief rolls. She declared the relief money was appropriated by Congress for expenditure to persons in need without regard to their ability to work.

Relief officials, in answer to her suit, which she drew up herself, claimed it was discretionary with them to decide which persons should receive direct relief and which should be compelled to work for their money. They charged there was no "vested right" in Miss Cage to receive money when she declined to register with the employment bureau so work could be found for her.

'Auld Lang Syne' for Ryan Mingles With Football Yells

700 Transients Still Awaiting Order to Camp

District Feeds and Shelters Them on Day-to-Day Basis; Cost, $400.

Seven hundred transient veterans are still in Washington, waiting to be sent to CCC or WPA camps, it was revealed last night.

There are no orders as to where they shall be sent. The War Department has not yet made up its mind. Meanwhile, the problem is being handled on a day-to-day basis, and it is costing the District about $400 a day.

Last night 150 homeless former service men who had learned to depend on the District Transient Bureau for food and lodging at various times during the last two years waited and muttered in front of the old Transient Bureau headquarters at John Marshall place and C street northwest for nearly an hour, demanding that something be done.

Finally, at about 7:30 p. m., the five officials who still remained in the headquarters, an old brownstone church, decided to put the men up in private rooming houses for the night. They gave each a requisition for 50 cents to pay for the lodging.

Today and tomorrow the whole thing will be repeated, according to the Transient Bureau officials. They blamed it all on War Department red tape.

Of the 700 waiting veterans, about 520 are depending on the Transient Bureau for their meals and beds.

"They'll probably be sent to the camps," one official explained last night. "But nobody knows when. It may be a week, two weeks, maybe tomorrow. Probably at least a week."

Since the Federal Emergency Relief Administration ordered transient lodges closed to newcomers on September 20, about 1,500 transients have been shipped to camps from Washington.

The last order for taking care of any portion of this number was carried out last Sunday, when 39 transient civilians were sent to the FERA camp at Fort Eustis, Va.

Football yells and music of friendship swept through Union Station yesterday as the Most Rev. James H. Ryan was accorded a rousing farewell by Catholic University students and professors.

Several hundred persons, including the red-coated musicians of the university band, gave the retiring university rector a send-off as he stepped aboard the Capital Limited of the Baltimore & Ohio for Omaha, where he will become bishop of the diocese.

Someone asked him how long he expected to remain in Omaha.

"I'll be there until they bury me," he grinned.

Participants in the informal ceremonies included football players, representatives of numerous religious orders, members of the Sisters of Charity, personal friends, educational, religious and civic leaders.

Among them were Dr. Ignatius Smith, Catholic University professor of philosophy; Dr. Maurice Sheehy, assistant to the director of the university; C. Marshall Campbell, dean of the college of arts and letters, and Dr. John F. Fenton, of St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, all of whom accompanied Bishop Ryan toward Omaha.

Others present included Arthur J. Bergman, head football coach; George Milligan, star end on the football team; the Rev. Spear Strahan, of the English department of the university, and Frederick V. Murphy, head of the university's department of architecture.

Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of the Baltimore diocese, who was to have accompanied Bishop Ryan to Omaha, was reported to be ill in Baltimore. He may go West in time for the induction ceremonies next Thursday, however.

Bishop Ryan was honored at several receptions last week and was named rector emeritus of the university.

R. J. Lewis, 46, Is Found Dead In Apartment

Estranged Wife Discovers Body of Tennesseean; Autopsy Planned.

Robert James Lewis, 46, said to be a member of a prominent Tennessee family, was found dead early last night in the bedroom of his first floor apartment at 1901 N street northwest, by his wife, Dorothy. Beside the bed were two empty green bottles. They had once contained 100 tablets of aspirin each.

Lewis was unemployed. His wife, an employe of the State Department, had left him last Thursday.

He did not leave the house Sunday, his landlady said. She became worried, hearing no noise in his room. She asked Mrs. Lewis to come and investigate.

About 6 p. m. Mrs. Lewis arrived and found her husband's door locked. She called a locksmith and together they broke in and found him stretched across the bed. An Emergency Hospital doctor said he had been dead 12 hours.

In the room police found a letter addressed to his wife. There was no evidence in the letter, Coroner A. Magruder Macdonald said, of suicidal intention. However, police discovered an envelope in his car, which was parked around the corner. On it was written:

"I am Robert J. Lewis. Notify my wife, Dorothy Lewis."

The landlady said she knew little of the man's past. She said she believed he had once been wealthy. An autopsy will be performed today.

Unfed 4 Camp

But White House Siege Proves Failure.

The plan of a discharged sailor and his family from Philadelphia to camp in front of the White House until they starved to death was short-lived.

Yesterday morning the former sailor, Lewis Vincent Farrell, his wife and their two children stationed themselves by the iron fence along the Pennsylvania avenue side of the Executive Mansion with the declared intention of letting the President "see an average American family starve to death."

But within less than a hour after the quartet had settled down by the fence White House police persuaded Farrell to go to the Navy Department. He had complained that he could not get a job until his navy record was changed and that there was a "slanderous statement" in it.

The former sailor added that he "could get a job all right if they would fix up that statement."

Officials at the Navy Department said after Farrell's visit that his discharge record was based entirely upon the man's "inaptitude" in the service.

The little family from Philadelphia disappeared after the father's trip to see Navy officials. The four had not called on relief agencies in the Capital last night.

Citizens Vote To Censure Group Head

Association Members Prootest Intrusion by President.

The Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association last night voted a reprimand of Thomas E. Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, for his recent appearance before the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in behalf of the proprietor of a liquor store at 7800 Alaska avenue northwest who wished his license renewed.

The association, in whose territory the store is located, opposed renewal of the license. Lodge was one of several, including Stephen T. Early, White House secretary, who spoke in favor of granting the license. The board issued the license yesterday.

In a resolution the Sixteenth street group registered "vigorous protest against the intrusion of any officer of the federation into the affairs of a member body in violation of the wishes of the majority of the members of the said body."

The following were named chairmen of standing committees: Liquor license and zoning, James R. Kirkland; public utilities, I. Irwin Bololin; legislation, fire and police, Earle W. Sapp; education, Mrs. H. M. Phillips; streets and sidewalks, Perry Cleveland; health and sanitation, Dr. William H. England; publicity, Miss Freda Dorothy Egbert, and membership, G. D. Skinner.

Ticket 'Fixing' Charged

Flagrant "fixing" by officials and negligence by policemen in connection with traffic regulation was charged by H. S. Yohe in a discussion at the Interfederation Conference.

Yohe, vice president of the Montgomery County Civic Federation, said that traffic regulation should begin with proof of financial responsibility and drastic tests for applicants for operator's permits.

After the discussion the group decided to invite local and county traffic judges to attend next month's meeting to present their ideas on traffic.

School Text Is Hit

Grover W. Ayers, executive secretary of the Ten Miles Square, told the members of the West End Citizens Association that "Becker's Modern History," a textbook used in the District schools, devotes too much space to the Soviet Union—three or four pages.

Ayers hailed Comptroller General McCarl's decision that public school employes must sign a statement that they have not taught or advocated communism before they can be paid. His resolution asking that a committee be appointed to attend the Board of Education's meeting tomorrow was adopted.

Group Elects Officers

Fred A. Emery last night was elected president of the Society of Natives. William E. Richardson and Mrs. William L. Broaddus were elected as vice presidents. The group re-elected Miss Emma Bright recording secretary; Mrs. Watson Shelton, corresponding secretary, and Frederick Umhau, treasurer. It named Jesse C. Suter and Mrs. Henry Fenno Sawtelle as delegates to the federation.

Dollar Pass Supported

A campaign being carried on by the citizens' associations of the Northeast to secure a $1 weekly pass good on all Washington street cars and buses, interchangeably, last night received the support of the Lincoln Park Citizens Association. The indorsement was moved by Alfred D. Calvert, as the group met in the Bryan School.

Potomac Fish to Stock Streams of Puerto Rico

700 Catfish and Sunfish Start Long Journey Today to Add to Edible Supply in Island; Care Is Taken to Prevent Seasickness on Boat Ride.

Maybe it looks like carrying coals to Newcastle for the Bureau of Fisheries to go to such pains to deliver live Potomac River fish to the government of Puerto Rico. But it isn't.

Early this morning a shipment of catfish and blue-gill sunfish will leave the Department of Commerce by truck for Baltimore, where they will be shipped to Puerto Rico. There they will be expected to breed prolifically so that Puerto Ricans may have the fun of catching them and then eating them.

Although an island, Puerto Rico, like most Latin-American countries, has a scant supply of edible fish, while the North American continent has an abundance.

Along with the live fish, which will be packed in water-filled wooden barrels, will be 100,000 rainbow trout eggs from the United States hatchery at Wytheville, Va. It is comparatively simple to ship fish eggs anywhere. European streams have been stocked with American trout and salmon in this way.

It is much more difficult and a more recent achievement to send live fish whose breeding period is so short that their eggs cannot be preserved as those of trout.

Last year a shipment to Puerto Rico resulted in the loss of 30 per cent of the sunfish and 60 per cent of the catfish, despite the care of J. Adger Smyth, of the Puerto Rican government of the insular possessions division. He attributed the loss chiefly to the creation of slime in the barrels.

This time he expects to try a new experiment which filters the water while pumping air into the barrels as heretofore. He believes the percentage of casualties will be smaller as a consequence.

Oddly enough, fish get seasick, like the rest of us, if they travel by boat instead of in their own submarine fashion. Consequently, the 300 sunfish and 400 catfish will not be fed from the time they leave the Department of Commerce aquarium today until they reach Puerto Rico on Saturday.

Latin-American countries are clamoring for American fish and eggs to stock their streams since the Bureau of Fisheries has proved its ability to transport them, according to Fred G. Orsinger, aquarium director.

Venezuela, Argentina, Chile and the Panama Canal Zone have obtained shipments, and Peru and other countries are requesting them. Only 20 per cent of the 577 fish sent to Argentina last March perished.

3,000 Women To Be Given Works Jobs

WPA Projects Totaling $1,289,404 Approved By Roosevelt.

Free Lunches for Needy School Children Are Assured.

Jobs for some 3,000 women who have been employed on District relief work and continuation of the free lunches for needy school children are provided for in WPA projects given Presidential approval yesterday.

The women's projects call for an eventual expenditure of $1,960,645. The projects will insure continuation of sewing rooms and similar activities through which clothing and other necessities are made for the needy, and will care for almost all employable women on relief, except those who might be classed with men white-collar workers, Commissioner George E. Allen, works and relief administrator, said.

Approval of the school lunch project, estimated to cost $167,008, assures free lunches for the pupils for the balance of the school year, the Commissioner said. It also will provide jobs for many women. The money will be spent for both food and hire of workers, he said.

In all the President approved District PWA projects amounting to $1,289,404. Others were continuation of the Logan circle transient student lodge, $10,800; grading and improvement of the grounds of the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains, $27,000; constructing playgrounds and improvements at the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Glenn Dale, Md., $72,697, and employment of a staff to handle distribution of Federal surplus commodities, $51,256.

The District has submitted WPA projects totaling $15,000,000. So far projects which have been approved and for which cash has been allocated amount to $4,190,000; to which is to be added $400,000 cash allocated for the projects approved by the President yesterday, and $751,900 for sewers, which have been approved by the President and the Comptroller General, but for which the District still is awaiting formal notice of actual allocation of cash.

Only approval of several white collar projects which have been pending before Federal authorities for some time is needed to complete the transition from relief and work relief to the WPA program in the District, Commissioner Allen said.

The several thousand unemployables and others who remain on the relief rolls are to be cared for out of District relief appropriations. Following conferences with relief and welfare officials yesterday, Commissioner Allen said he was confident that by cutting down administration expenses he would keep monthly relief expenditures within the $166,666 which represents one-twelfth of the $2,000,000 appropriated by Congress for the current fiscal year.

A Former Washington Seminary Student Soon Will Dominate Two Local Screens

Margaret Kies Returns As An Accepted Star

By Nelson B. Bell.

It may not be in the vivid recollection of a great number of Washingtonians, but a talented young woman who will be notably in the public eye, as the saying goes, during the forthcoming week of motion picture presentation in the Capital—that would begin on Friday—not so long ago was a pseudo-resident of this city, but with ardent aspirations to embrace the late Horace Greeley's prophetic advice ostensibly aimed at the careers of ambitious young men. You, of course, have heard that "Go West, Young Man, Go West" business. And it did not mean Mae!

To get to the gist of the matter, a few years ago a young woman by the name of Margaret Kies left her home in Dubuque, Iowa, and came to Washington as an enrolled student at National Park Seminary, where, incidentally, semi-professional dramatic activities were carried on last spring and summer.

Miss Kies, it seems, came East considerably against her will. What she really wished to do was to go West, in something of the Greeley tradition, and seek fame and fortune in the studios and on the lots of the cinema. But her family had prevailed. At least, however, she had secured parental consent to major in dramatics. That was something.

As a matter of fact, that was enough to bring her a fair measure of distinction among the many other charming young women who had matriculated at one of the National Capital's most noted finishing schools. Miss Kies garnered practically all of the honors available to members of her class—senior executive of her class, president of the dramatic club, captain of athletics for the school and member of Alpha Epsilon Pi Sorority.

Enrolled in American Academy.

When she finally felt herself ready for a "career," things on Broadway seemed as dull as any doldrum induced by the depression. So the resourceful Miss Kies packed her trunks—one who has graduated from Forest Glen has more than one trunk—and sailed for London.

In the British metropolis she appeared in "Escape," "Death Takes a Holiday," "By Candlelight" and "The Middle Watch." Make note that she acquired a practically perfect English accent during this interval.

Then she returned to New York, found things still dullish and hopped a train, still with all those trunks, for the West Coast. Original ambition now was beginning to achieve itself. There followed minor roles in a variety of films and then—The Great Deception. This was not the title of a picture, but an item of cold, but illusive, fact.

Fox Films Corporation was about to begin the shooting of Noel Coward's "Cavalcade"—the only stage spectacle ever translated to the screen without the alteration, deletion or substitution of a line, word or bit of action.

Every member of the cast must be English, since the picture was to be a pageant of authentic English life down through the years.

Passed Every Test.

Fortified by a year's London stage experience, a bullet-proof British accent and the courage of her convictions, the Margaret of Dubuque and National Park took a test, passed with flying colors and fooled the Powers That Be to an extent that impelled them to hail her as a British actress born and bred.

It was not until long after the release of "Cavalcade" that it leaked out that "the girl on the Titanic" was a native American.

By this time, every informed picturegoer must have guessed it.

Margaret Kies was Margaret Lindsay, under long-term contract to the Warner Brothers and acclaimed one of the most talented young actresses in pictures.

Never satisfied with the present accomplishment, Miss Lindsay is declared by those who should know to be diligently rehearsing, between pictures, with a Bobby Connolly unit of dancing girls. It is her wish to attain new prominence on the silver sheet by equipping herself to star in a future musical production in contemplation by the Warner Brothers.

Miss Lindsay, come Friday, will be conspicuous in the casts of both "The Frisco Kid," starring Jimmy Cagney, at the Earle, and "Personal Maid's Secret," at the Metropolitan.

The boys in the loewcal offices of Loew's, Inc., really are doing something about celebrating the seventeenth anniversary of the opening of Loew's Palace Theater.

With Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Mutiny on the Bounty" smashing records in the manner customarily referred to as right and left, Division Manager Carter Barron makes known that two other eagerly awaited pictures will be along to the same screen in comparatively short order. The shortness of the order depends, needless to say, on the length of "Mutiny's" run.

At any rate, these are Paramount productions of which much is expected, the one being Mae West's next, "Klondike Lou," with Victor McLaglen—and that a perfect teaming of rugged talents that is!—the other, Harold Lloyd's new starring vehicle, "The Milky Way."

Is Actress as Well as Singer

Unlike many prima donnas who undertake a role that requires both a high order of interpretative dramatic talent and a voice of operatic caliber, Evelyn Laye, the beautiful young English star of both stage and screen, pictured above, in "Evensong," current on the Belasco screen, proves herself unequivocally an artiste of dual endowment. Her emotional portrayal of a part that lays a heavy impost upon a player's acting ability takes rank with the best the screen has to offer. The quality of her singing, of course, goes without saying.

Then for the screens at Loew's Fox and the Columbia will be such releases as "The Bride Comes Home," with Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray; "Motorboat Girl," with Randolph Scott, Leo Carillo and Gertrude Michael; Lee Tracy and Gail Patrick in "Two Fisted," and Admiral Byrd's saga of "Little America" and the Antarctic.

Community Center Announces.

Those interested in the study and discussion of "Environment," under the leadership of Miss Ella Barnes, are invited to attend the first of a series of meetings tonight at 7:30 in Thompson Community Center, under the supervision of Mrs. D. E. Middleton. Decor, in its various aspects, will comprise the subject of the evening.

In connection with another ramification of the diverse activities of the Community Center Department, Terry McPhearson and the Players Club announce recent changes in the cast of "The Poor Nut," to be presented tonight in Roosevelt High School Auditorium, at 8:15.

The role of Col. Small will be played by Robert Morey, just out from under an appendectomy to appear in the part; Hub Smith will be played by Charles Grunwell and Mr. Grunwell's original role will be taken by Kenneth Peterson. Harry Tracy Martin will appear as Prof. Deming and Marjorie McGann and Gertrude Elmendorf have been added to the cast.

So now you know. But what you may not know is that tickets are priced at 25 cents.

With those lunatic Marx Brothers—that is to say three of them, Groucho, Chico and Harpo—scheduled to take possession of the screen at Loew's Fox Theater on Friday, some sort of insurance should be made available to cover the wear and tear on important buttons and seams that is bound to result from their inspired insanity in "A Night at the Opera." Audiences—take it from one who comprised part of a recent one—do not laugh at the Marx boys in this one. What they do is explode! Maybe spontaneous combustion insurance is what you want. At any rate, get something!

"And a Little Child, Etc."

It is the newest generation that really finds the economic problems of the New Deal perplexing.

Their elders have pretty well accustomed themselves to having nothing and making it do, but these tots and teens are up against a situation of another hue and very little cry!

Take little Shirley Temple for example. She now is actually getting what reputedly she is worth. Shirley's studio salary recently was increased from $1,200 to $2,500 per week. With royalties from commercial products, bearing her name, striking approximately the same figure, the 7-year-old star now is earning as much as most of the first-flight adult luminaries in pictures.

Several other baby stars are doing fairly well for themselves, too, thank you.

Freddie Bartholomew, 10-year-old little English boy, say the Associated Press expert observers, who received only $150 a week—note the superciliousness of that "only"—for his first picture, "David Copperfield," jumped to $250 and now, with "Little Lord Fauntleroy" on the fire, will receive $1,000 for each seven days' compensation.

Others Step Up.

The highest Jackie Cooper ever received at the peak of his form as a juvenile was $1,300 per week.

Mickey Rooney, 15, started in at $150 a week and now draws $400 a week on a yearly basis, whether he works or not.

Sybil Jason, at 7, started with an optional contract calling for $100 a week for six months. The option has been taken up and she gets $250 a week on a new long-term contract.

Baby Le Roy receives $80 a week when he is working and $35 a week when he isn't—and he's still in swaddling clothes.

Postman-Rings-Twice Note.

"Trusting to be with you soon," is the message postcarded by Charlie Bochert, avant couriering Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book," still running in New York.

"Well, I got another print of 'Ecstacy' and this time I shipped it packed in ice," is what Sam Cummins dittoes from London.

Evidently the combined causes of the recent hot spell!

Changes Are Made In Bori's Program

Italian Songs Substituted for French Group.

A slight change in the program to be sung in Constitution Hall tonight by Lucrezia Bori, Spanish soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, is announced by her local manager, Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. In place of the group of songs in seventeenth century French costume, Mme. Bori will present, in a Venetian costume of 1700, three Italian songs, "La Pavane" (De Leva), "Caro, il Mio Bambin" (Guarnieri) and "Invito a la Danza" (Respighi).

Mme. Bori has also added to her program the aria, "Depuis le Jour," from Charpentier's opera, "Louise." She will begin her recital with an aria from Bellini's "Romeo e Giuletta," followed by "Se Florindo e Fedele" (Scarlatti) and "Un Certo Non So Che" (Vivaldi).

Other songs announced are "The Rose and the Nightingale" (Rimski-Korsakov), "Mandoline" and "Clair de Lune" (Debussy), "Convien Partir" and "Ciascum lo Dice," from "La Figlia del Reggimento" (Donizetti), and a group of Spanish lyrics, sung in gitana costume, "La Nieta de Carmen" (Font), "La Gitana de Rumbo" (Peuella) and "Cantares" (Turina).

Her accompanist and assisting artist, Frederick Bristol, will play two groups of solos, including "Pour le Piano" and "Ondine" (Debussy), "Capriccio" (Bortkievicz), "Espana Cani" (arr. Copeland), "Jeunes Filles au Jardin" (Mompou), "Voice of Lir" and "Animated Conversation" (Henry Cowell).

Ozarkian Farce Of Lady Smithy Fires No Spark

Bellows Needed to Blow a Breath of Promise Into National's Gauchery.

Applying a vicious "scissors" that squeezed out all audience enthusiasm midway of its length, snapping on a deadly "headlock" that paved the way for a devastating succession of last-act "body slams," and then putting on the finishing touches of a "strangle hold" that effectually choked off all audible signs of majority approval, "Swing Your Lady" last evening threw a large, and apparently receptive, audience in the National Theater for the fatal count of three, which in the reckonings of the padded mats of the wrestling ring spells "out."

Described as "an idyll of the Ozarks," this broad burlesque of the lowest strata of the "rasslin' racket," as it might function in the rural sections of the hill-billy country where a band of "managers" and their lowest form of animal life, flatteringly known as a heavyweight grappler, are wondering whence their next meal is to come, is in point of fact a ribald, rowdy, raucous and unintentionally ridiculous travesty on even the notorious malleability of farcical comedy at its wildest.

A Monument to Audacity.

Presumed, one supposes, by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, co-authors of the earlier nautical piece that achieved such a naughtical metropolitan success, to match the daring and provocative gayety of "Sailor, Beware," the rustically environed "Swing Your Lady" succeeds only in being a monument to an audacious combination of frank profanity and that pernicious sort of double entendre that is worse by implication, suggestion and misleading phonetics than outspoken obscenity would be if consistently and rigidly adhered to.

The heavyweight wrestler is unwittingly "matched" with a woman blacksmith, mother of what she delicately denominates two "woods colts," or "brush monkeys," to make a Plunkettian holiday for the legion post of a backwoods settlement in Missouri. The Amazonian wheelsmith is not averse to the attentions of men, although she professes scant tolerance for the superfluous institution of marriage.

Joe Skapapolous, the meal ticket of the indigent magnates, becomes apprised that spring is in the air, succumbs to the gentle urges of the romantic mating season and, when the father of Sadie Horn's nameless son appears on the pachydermish and passionate scene, precipitates a crisis.

In the process of working out preliminary and subsequent developments, there are, of course, moments of high hilarity. There also are some of deep blushes. There is none, it may be said, of adult, literate or moving drama.

Fine Portrayals Wasted.

It is lamentable that such fine individual performances as are contributed to this vagrant product of the season's early productional activities, by John Alexander, as "The Greek Hercules"; Marian Manley, as the smithy of such easy accessibility and generous impulses; Ann Thomas, a secretarial attache of the entourage who is present solely through a lust for travel; John Butler, the manager; Edgar Nelson, as the handler; Walter Davis, as the legion's small-time promoter, and Al Ochs, the promiscuous pappy, should have to be wasted on such drivel as this.

With an even break in quality of material the work of this group would have made "Swing Your Lady" another "Three Men on a Horse." Miss Manley and Mr. Alexander are uncommonly authentic in a regrettably poor cause. In extravagance of premise and quaintness of development there is a conspicuous affinity between this ill-judged "idyll" and "Three Men on a Horse."

The seven scenes into which the two acts have been divided are changed with astonishing speed, even if they do convey rather less than a convincing sense of the weather-beaten dilapidation of the ancient mountain locales they are supposed to represent.

"Swing Your Lady," at a rough guess, seems destined to swing by the neck until dead, unless prodigious revisions are made in the script.

New York-Hawaii Mail Schedule Is 40 Hours

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—A 40-hour mail schedule between New York and Honolulu was announced today by United Air Lines, effective with the first flight of the China Clipper.

Time from Great Lakes cities will be 35 hours, and it will be correspondingly less from points west of Chicago.

The Clipper will inaugurate the Pacific service with a flight leaving San Francisco next Friday.

United Air Lines will arrange its schedules to speed mail from the Eastern half of the United States to connect with the Clipper.

Dancers Anything But Swans In Famous Legat Caricatures

Pictures Exhibited Here Show Russians Had a 'Mae West.'

Dancers, as other dancers see them, aren't much like the graceful figures an audience watches on the stage, as proved by caricatures of famous Russian ballet personalities by two former members of the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe.

Even Pavlowa, usually thought of in terms of floating swans, appears in a caricature by the Brothers Legat to be a strong-willed New England schoolmarm with a determination to stand on the toes of one foot.

The Legats, Serge and Nicholas, turned out about two score of the amusing drawings shortly after the turn of the century when Russia teemed with palaces, caviar, vodka and ballet dancers.

Now 18 of the caricatures are on view in the music division of the Public Library, loaned by the Bekefi Deleporte Institute until November 28. This is their first public appearance in Washington.

Russian Mae West.

Russia, in the time of the Czars, had its Mae West. Long before the buxom blonde issued her famous "Come up 'n' see me sometime" invitation from the screen, her forerunner was cavorting around in the Imperial Opera House in old St. Petersburg.

Cherniavski, amply curved, never got as far in her profession as Mae West has in hers. She remained among the ladies of the ensemble, failing to reach the heights as ballerina. Her heftiness undoubtedly was against her. But she was widely known and sufficiently interesting for Serge and Nicholas Legat to choose her for a caricature subject.

Leopold Auer, teacher of Heifetz and court violinist to Alexander II, Alexander III and Nicholas II, is shown scraping a bow across strings, his bulbous nose almost resting on the instrument. His shoes are reminiscent of Chaplin. His head resembles an expanse of desert with bits of cactus growing on it.

Another caricature shows Alfred Bekefi who was fond of impersonating Negroes in his dances. The story goes that one of the Legat brothers—probably Nicholas since Serge was of a melancholy nature and finally committed suicide—once made-up four male dancers in imitation of Bekefi in one of his Negro impersonations.

Legat did such a grand job of the make-up that all four men looked exactly alike and the dance became a terrific muddle as the girls could not tell their partners apart when they tried to execute an involved figure. They were booed by the audience. Legat was fined by the Czar.

Nature being what it is, all women are not born "free and equal." Many readers of this newspaper know that—to their sorrow! A woman's days are not alike. There are difficult days when some women suffer too severely to conceal it.

There didn't used to be anything to do about it. It is estimated that fully eight million had to suffer month after month. Today, a million have accepted the relief offered by Midol.

Must you favor yourself, and save yourself certain days of every month?

As a rule, it's a knowing woman who has that little aluminum case tucked in her purse. One who knows what to wear, where to go, how to take care of herself, how to get the most out of life. The eighth woman, who uses Midol! Of course, a smart woman will not try every pill or tablet somebody says is good for periodic pain. But Midol is recommended by specialists. It can form no habit because it is not a narcotic. It's effective for hours, so two tablets should see you through your worst day.

Evans Resigns as Cleveland Aid, 'Surprised' at Acceptance

With Shirley Povich

IT REQUIRED only a half-filled stadium at College Park last fall to convince Georgetown and Maryland of the error of their ways in attempting to sell their football game to the Washington public at $3.30 per copy. Eight thousand temporary seats, rushed into the stadium in anticipation of a capacity crowd, were as empty as a denuded vacuum that afternoon when the city's football fans rightly deduced that $3.30 worth of football was not on tap.

POVICH.

For the second renewal of their annual battle, at Griffith Stadium on Saturday, Georgetown and Maryland have taken the sane course. For the folks who must sit between the 30-yard lines in elevated boxes, they have provided $2.20 tickets. Admission to the reserved seats in both upper and lower decks is priced at a fair $1.65 and to meet the demands of the great bulk of the football-going public, general admission is priced at $1.10.

Maryland and Georgetown have it within their power to provide for Washington the city's only local football classic. Unless the signs fail, 20,000 fans will be in attendance Saturday, their imagination captured by the spectacle of a clash between strictly local teams whose comparative ability has been long disputed. For the first and only time this season, Washington fans will be watching teams whose past performances are an open book, whose faces have long been familiar on local gridirons.

That 6-to-0 beating dealt Georgetown by Maryland last fall at College Park was, in fact, the result of a lucky break. Charley Parcells, big shot of the Georgetown backfield, was in the act of throwing a forward pass when he found himself being rushed by Maryland ends. Thinking to get rid of the ball in any manner and thus save himself a 15-yard loss, he heaved the ball aimlessly far down the field only to see it snatched by Norwood Sothoron, of Maryland, who rushed it back 76 yards to the 2-yard line, whence Maryland scored the only touchdown of the game.

UMPIRES have long pointed with more or less pride to the undeniable fact that ball players rarely make good umpires. They point to the most recent case of Fred Marberry, who has already thrown up the sponge, as the saying goes, after less than a one-year career as an umpire. Mere proficiency on the ball field is no guarantee that a man owns the knowledge, the decision and the proper temperament of a big league umpire, the umps point out, with a veiled hint that a big league umpire must be a man apart and above the common herd.

Well, indications now are that big league umpires rarely make good in other phases of the game. Billy Evans' resignation as general manager of the Cleveland Club was accepted yesterday and provides another disappointing chapter in this history of umpires who have stepped out of their roles to assume other capacities in the game. Back in 1927, George Moriarty quit his job as an umpire to assume the management of the Detroit Tigers and two years later was happy to return to his umpiratical monkey suit with a dismal managerial record behind him.

It was the Cleveland club which, with the hiring of Evans, started something of a fad for general managers. Such a post was unknown before Evans was appointed to the role by the Indians six years ago. When Tom Yawkey bought the bankrupt Red Sox in 1932, Eddie Collins popped up as the club's general manager, and when Powel Crosley bought the Cincinnati Reds two years ago, Larry McPhail turned up as general manager.

In each case, the club's general manager has had difficulties with the playing manager. Both managers Roger Peckinpaugh and Walter Johnson were continually at odds with Evans preceding their release; at Boston Manager Bucky Harris and Eddie Collins were at loggerheads, and at Cincinnati Manager Bob O'Farrell found happiness only after he had parted company with McPhail and the Reds. Bradley says his club will never have another general manager. The job does seem dangerous for all concerned.

In Short—

Billy Evans once won fame as the perfect physical specimen . . . after a survey by the Cleveland Athletic Club which examined several thousand subjects and used the Roman and Greek relative measurements as a criterion . . . Bucky Harris will entrain today for Dayton, where the minor league meeting is expected to produce a flock of player trades . . . Jockey Danny Meade, one of the more prosperous riders, quit Bowie in disgust yesterday after the rainy week-end and is en route to accept engagements at Santa Anita . . . At one of the latest George Washington-Catholic U. games, President Cloyd Heck Marvin, of G. W., left his place in the stands, walked to the players' bench and ordered "Maud" Crum, the G. W. coach, to withdraw from the game all G. W. players charged with unnecessary roughness . . . George Washington players have refused to meet Catholic University gridmen in a proposed spelling match to be conducted over the radio . . . Word from the Pacific Coast hints that Notre Dame will be the team invited to represent the East in the Rose Bowl despite its defeat by Northwestern and its tie with Army . . . The Irish's fame as a last-minute team would draw a sell-out crowd to Pasadena.

Army-Irish Films Show No Fouling

Position of Field Judge Not Good; Ruling Is Defended by Others.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—Slow motion pictures of the Army-Notre Dame football game, shown today at the Pathe Studios, failed to settle the argument over the play on which the Cadets were penalized for pass interference, on the 2-yard line, and the Irish thereby given their chance to score the tying touchdown in the last minute.

The pictures showed both Whitey Grove, Army halfback, and Bill Grohs, quarterback, in proximity to Wayne Millner, Notre Dame receiver, but left a question as to what, if any, interference occurred.

Layden More Closely Covered.

On a previous pass, where no interference was called, it appeared as though Mike Layden, Notre Dame halfback, was more closely covered than Millner was on the subsequent and more critical play.

W. R. Crowley, of Bowdoin, umpire of the game, who backed up the decision of the field judge, A. W. Palmer, saw the pictures and expressed the opinion they showed illegal interference. As Crowley saw the play on Saturday, Grove's left hand grabbed Millner's right arm at the moment when both were reaching for the ball.

The pictures, however, indicated Grove did not contact Millner in any way until after the ball was grounded. In answer to the hypothetical question raised by the pictures, Crowley said such contact as Grove appeared to make would not be a basis for penalty. Newspaper observers, at the film showing, were convinced there was no conspicuous grounds for calling interference.

Palmer Not In Good Position.

The pictures indicated Palmer was not in a good position to see the details of the play from his station near the sidelines, although he showed no hesitation in making his decision. Palmer did not ask Crowley for confirmation at the time. At his home in Haverford, Pa., today, Palmer declined to discuss his decision. He explained there was a rule against such discussion by members of the Eastern Association of Football Officials.

The pictures revealed the striking perfection of Army's touchdown pass, Monk Meyer to Grove, in the first period. Grove raced beyond the Notre Dame secondary, turning to catch the pass in full stride on the 5-yard line and plunge across the goal as Bill Shakespeare grabbed him from behind.

Navy Squad Rests; Staff Maps Plays

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 18.—Stimulated by their victory over Columbia, the Naval Academy football players were given a holiday today preparatory to settling down for the final polishing for the traditional clash with the Army on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, November 30.

Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, heady Navy coach, called off all work scheduled for today, letting the players rest, while the coaching staff got together to brew war medicine for the Cadets.

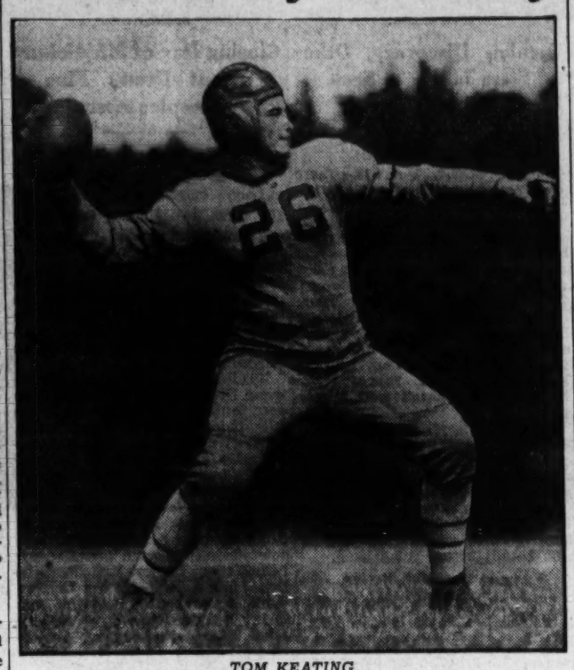
Hamilton sizes up the Army as having one of the best teams in the country. The Cadets he thinks have proved they have an unusually strong defense, coupled with a running, kicking and passing attack.

Thurnbald Conquers Cochran for Cue Title

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Arthur Thurnblad, playing in the form that brought him the 1931 title, jolted Welker Cochran, of San Francisco, out of undisputed possession of first place in the world three-cushion billiards championship tournament tonight by defeating the Pacific Coast star, 50 to 37, in 45 innings.

The defeat dropped Cochran, who had headed the standing since early in the tournament, into a first-place tie with the New York veteran, Willie Hoppe, at seven victories in eight matches. Cochran and Hoppe will meet tomorrow night for the championship.

20,000 Likely to See G. U.-Maryland Fray



TOM KEATING,

By Lewis F. Atchison.

AN even break in the weather apparently is the only thing needed to make the second annual Georgetown-Maryland game a complete success, financially speaking. At least 20,000 fans are expected to see the rivals in action at Griffith Stadium Saturday.

Georgetown's decisive victory over Manhattan evidently was proof enough to old Hilltop supporters that the Hoyas actually are well on their way back to the prominence they once enjoyed in Eastern football circles. A brisk demand for tickets yesterday was attributed to Saturday's result.

Whether Maryland's scoreless tie with Washington and Lee will hurt the game remains to be seen, but it appears that the intense rivalry and the gruelling battle that is assured by the very heat of the rivalry would be sufficient to overcome this. It is no sin to hold a heavier team to a scoreless tie in the mud and rain, but failure to score in four downs from the 1-yard line hardly is forgivable.

Maryland is going to show Georgetown a pair of clever wing men in Vic Willis and Lou Ennis, both of whom performed against the Hoyas last year, but Georgetown is going to show Maryland a quartet of ends who can go with the best of them in Tony Barabas, Johnny Cavadine, Dave Noonan and Bob Snyder.

As fine as was co-Captain Joe Meglen's work against Manhattan, Cavadine, Noonan and Snyder must receive some share of credit for their excellent work. They showed the results of Coach George Murtagh's painstaking coaching through the season, co-ordinating brawn and brain in battering down the Jasper offense. Georgetown could not have won without them.

Noonan, the best of the lot, conducts himself in veteran fashion under fire. From Murtagh he has picked up the pro style of defensive play and he uses his hands and head in a manner that belies his inexperience. Snyder is inclined to loaf at times. When in hot water he is at his best, but when the opposition isn't too tough, he isn't too good. Cavadine is like Noonan, steady and reliable and one of the best prospects on the squad. Barabas hasn't been used much at end, principally because he is being groomed for backfield duty next year.

Carl Cashion, Former Nat, Expires

SUPERIOR, Wis., Nov. 18.—J. Carl Cashion, 44, former member of the Washington Senators' pitching staff, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday.

Regarded as "another Walter Johnson" when signed by Clark Griffith, then manager of the Washington club in 1913, Carl Cashion failed to justify the promise he had displayed on minor league pitching mounds.

Cashion was a member of the Washington pitching staff during the years of 1913-14 and had an impressive percentage of victories in his first season when the Washington club finished second, but the following year he suffered an injury to his pitching arm in a game at Cleveland and was released.

Bigger even than the mountainous Johnson, who had already won renown as the speed king of the major leagues, Cashion possessed a fast ball that ranked second only to Johnson's, but he was troubled by wildness. Only his failure to develop control prevented his rise to pitching greatness, according to Griffith.

Quarles Beats Champ In Non-Title Meeting

Pittsburgh, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Featherweight Champion Freddy Miller, of Cincinnati, lost a ten-round decision here tonight to Norment Quarles, former North Carolinian, now fighting out of Pittsburgh. The bout was a nontitle affair.

Quarles, while a student at North Carolina, held the Southern Conference lightweight championship. He is the only man credited with a win over Bobby Goldstein, of Washington, D. C., in collegiate boxing.

Notre Dame Boy Breaks Neck in Interball Game

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 18 (AP).—Richard Sullivan, 19-year-old Notre Dame student from Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was in critical condition in St. Joseph Hospital today from a broken neck suffered in a Sunday interhall football game.

Sullivan, a sophomore, was playing with the St. Edward's Hall team against the Freshmen Hall eleven when he was injured. He was paralyzed below the shoulders. Physicians said his chance to recover was slight. His father, J. R. Sullivan, advertising manager of the Poughkeepsie Sunday Courier, was called to South Bend.

There have been only two football fatalities in Notre Dame history. One occurred in a freshman game, the other in an interhall contest.

Hunter Is Excused From Jury Duty

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 18 (AP).—Rawley Tilman, of Lake Wales, asked to be excused from Federal jury service today.

"Does your request have anything to do with November 20?" Judge Akerman inquired.

Tillman nodded affirmatively.

"Then," said the judge, "you are excused. To prevent a man from going hunting or fishing is a cruel and unusual procedure which is prohibited under the Constitution and, in my opinion, is legal ground for excusing a juror."

November 20 marks the opening of the hunting season.

2 Games Due Spotlight on Saturday

Princeton, Dartmouth to Clash for Mythical Eastern Title.

California, Stanford Play in West Classic; Other Battles Important.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The perfect-record teams of Princeton and Dartmouth collide at Palmer Stadium this week-end, with the mythical Eastern football championship apparently at stake. Because of its significance, this encounter will feature hostilities on the season's last "big" Saturday.

Dartmouth hasn't beaten the Tigers in any of their five games played since 1913. Accordingly, the Hanover outfit is grooming to slay another jinx, hoping to duplicate their Yale hoodoo feat. But the Tigers will be favorites because of their plentitude of power.

Several other matches will compete with the Princeton melee for national attention because of their sectional importance and traditional backgrounds.

The California-Stanford engagement at Palo Alto is one of the standouts. It is the last scheduled game for both elevens, and if the unbeaten Golden Bears can down the Stanford Indians, California will take sole possession of the Pacific Coast Conference title and probably clinch the job of Western representative in the Rose Bowl.

Other hostilities:

East—Harvard and Yale stage their annual Blue Ribbon classic at Cambridge. Yale is favored. Other traditional affairs bring together Boston U.-Boston College, Bucknell-Penn State, and Temple-Villanova. In addition, Army has a breather in Vermont before the Navy game. Colgate meets Rutgers, Georgetown engages Maryland, Columbia plays Brown, Detroit tackles Duquesne, North Dakota invades Western Maryland, and West Virginia opposes Washington and Jefferson.

Midwest—Minnesota and Ohio State, deadlocked for the Big Ten lead with four Conference victories each, play their final games. The unbeaten Minnesota Gophers meet Wisconsin, and Ohio State engages Michigan. Three other Conference matches pair Illinois-Chicago, Indiana-Purdue and Northwestern-Iowa. In the Big Six, where Nebraska already has clinched the title, Kansas meets Iowa State, and Missouri tangles with Kansas State. The big intersectional game of the day brings together Southern California and Notre Dame at South Bend. This contest lost considerable luster because of the Trojans' four defeats this season and Notre Dame's one beating and one tie. In addition Marquette plays Creighton.

South—Duke, conqueror of North Carolina, will clinch sole possession of the Southern Conference title if it beats North Carolina State at Raleigh. If Duke is upset, it may share the title with North Carolina. In the Southeastern Conference no games bearing on the title are slated this week, the only engagements being Auburn-Georgia, Georgia Tech-Florida and Mississippi State-Sewanee. Louisiana State, which already has clinched a title tie, meets Southwest Louisiana outside. Tulane plays Louisiana Normal, and Mississippi engages Centenary.

Pacific Coast—Besides the California-Stanford classic, two other conference games match Washington-Oregon and Montana-Oregon State. Also U. C. L. A. engages Loyola of Los Angeles.

Southwest — Southern Methodist and Texas Christian, the two perfect-record teams who are deadlocked for the conference title, play Baylor and Rice, respectively. The Christians are meeting the more formidable opponent. If both S. M. U. and T. C. U. survive they will decide the championship next week when they collide at Fort Worth. Another conference match pairs Texas and Arkansas on Friday.

Rocky Mountains—Colorado University will try to maintain its conference lead against Wyoming, while Colorado College tangles with Colorado State.

Thieves Throw Auburn 'Gate' for $11,000 Loss

Auburn, Ala., Nov. 18 (AP).—Alabama Polytechnic Institute's athletic fund was $11,000 short today—because robbers pried the combination off a gymnasium safe some time Saturday night and escaped with receipts of the Auburn-Oglethorpe game.

Mrs. Ella Joe Nickle, secretary to Coach Jack Meagher, in whose office the safe was located, discovered the robbery yesterday.

'Big Train,' on Farm, Says He Has Communicated With Bradley.

WALTER JOHNSON, at his Germantown, Md., farm, evinced great interest yesterday when informed that Billy Evans had resigned as general manager of the Cleveland club.

Johnson admitted that he had anticipated Evans' resignation and that he had been in communication recently with Alva Bradley, owner of the Cleveland team, concerning reorganization of the club's official staff.

Denying that he had been made an offer to replace Evans in the post of general manager, Johnson said, however, that he had discussed the possibility with Bradley last summer when the Cleveland owner gave him his release as field manager.

"I am perfectly happy here on the farm," Johnson said over the long-distance telephone, "and I don't know that I would want to return to baseball. But Mr. Bradley did tell me that he had planned to reorganize the team's business staff and it may concern me.

"Throughout my term with the Cleveland team, Mr. Bradley was my heartiest supporter and we parted as firm friends. I don't know any man by whom I would rather be employed."

Lateral Is Deplored By Big Ten Official

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Nov. 18.—Frank Lane, Big Ten football official, said today, "Football as played this season is just glorified basketball."

"Fundamentally this season's gridiron version is topsy-turvy. Formerly the player who made a shoe-string tackle was a hero. Now he's a bum because that kind of tackle won't stop a lateral pass. He's got to jump up around the ball-carrier's neck and grab a handful of ears to be in style. Blocking is a lost art."

Blind 'Boston Tar Baby' Critically Hurt by Cab

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Sam Langford, 49, known as the "Boston Tar Baby" in boxing circles two decades ago, was critically injured today when he was struck by a taxicab.

Move Is Laid To Economy By Bradley

Job of General Manager to Be Discontinued; Scout Called In.

Former Umpire Asserts Profits Last Season Were $75,000.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 18.—William G. (Billy) Evans, general manager of the Cleveland Indians for eight years, resigned today.

Alva Bradley, president of the Cleveland Baseball Co., announced the resignation and said it had been accepted with regret. At the same time, Bradley announced the office of general manager was being discontinued and that C. C. Slapnicka, chief scout for the Indians for 14 years, had been appointed assistant to the president.

Evans, an umpire in the American League for 22 years before he became manager of the Cleveland Club, said his plans were "indefinite, although I hope to have a new job by the time my present contract expires November 27."

Will Attend Meeting.

He said he had made no contracts with other major league clubs. Asked concerning the possibility of a move to the Detroit club, he explained his original statement included Detroit and added that while he has received no offers, he is "in a receptive mood for any offers." He plans to attend the minor league meeting in Dayton, Ohio, starting Wednesday.

Evans said the acceptance of his resignation was "as much a surprise to me as to anyone." He said his salary was reduced from $30,000 a year to $12,500 a year at the end of the 1933 season, with a bonus of

Hurt Halfback Flees Hospital, Runs Fourteen Miles to Class

By the Associated Press.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 18.—Halfback Frank Efranko of the West Liberty College football team landed at the bottom of a pile-up on the gridiron.

Trainers examined him and found he had concussion of the brain.

Efranko went to the hospital—for a few hours. During the night, attendants said he escaped from his cot in delirium and ran 14 miles back to the campus.

His teammates, the police and school officials hunted him for hours. But this morning young Efranko casually walked into a classroom.

He took his English assignment, then nearly collapsed. This afternoon he returned to the hospital. Doctors said pneumonia threatens him after his hours of exposure.

Mustangs On Top Of Football Heap

Southern Methodist's decisive defeat of U. C. L. A. on Monday of last week and its victory over Arkansas Saturday placed the team at the top of the national gridiron pyramid, according to Associated Press commentators.

2. Minnesota.
3. Texas Christian.
4. Princeton.
5. California.
6. Rice.

By George Trevor.

BENEATH the Cardinal banner which floats above Leland Stanford's moorish buildings you will find many a super-football player. Most of them are of comparatively recent date because of the rugby interlude before the war when American football was temporarily banned on the Pacific Coast. Under the counselship of Pop Warner, Stanford attained national prominence as a gridiron power and today Tiny Thornhill is upholding the old master's standard.

Walter Heinecke, a live wildcat of a boy, made up in bristling aggressiveness what he lacked in stature. Heinecke is the one comparatively small man on a team of giants, but his tackling range was as wide as the field and he could smell out a pass. Harold McCreery, bigger than Heinecke, is named as the alternate pivot over Wes Muller, a modern Goliath.

Bill Corbus, known as the "baby-faced assassin" because of his innocent expression and his killer instinct on the field, was the flashiest of Stanford's guards. A sure shot place kicker Corbus dropped back to boot field goals under pressure. Seraphim Post wheeled out of line like an avenging angel to cut down the defensive end or wing back. Blocking guards are indispensable under the Warner system and few have gleamed out more ruthlessly than Post who believed both his angelic Christian name and his static surname. Don Robesky was an interference leader of the same savage stripe.

Stanford isn't as rich in tackles as in guards, but Harry Shipkey and Charles Johnston, tall as the live oak trees that line the Stanford esplanade, could hold their own with the best. A pair of modern mammoths, Bob Reynolds and Claude Gallaway may yet claim priority if they continue their steady development. Ted Shipkey, Stanford's best known end, could

Two Horses Win Split Bowie Race in Series of Coincidences

Run Distance In 1:50 4-5; Pay $8.60

Our Reigh and Thorson Always in Lead; Each Wins by Length.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

BOWIE RACE TRACK, Nov. 18. Here's a subject for a "Strange As It Seems" cartoon. When the scheduled sixth race for today failed to fill, those in charge decided that inasmuch as the feature race had drawn an overflow of horses that the program would be improved by dividing the Robert Eden Handicap.

This was done and the handicap was run in two divisions as the fifth and the sixth races.

Here's the punch line: The winners of each section not only paid the identical mutuel of $8.60 but the each ran the race in exactly the same time, 1 minute 50 4-5 seconds. In other words, had the entries remained intact the two horses would have run a dead heat!

In addition, the style of race run by the two was the same. Each jumped into the lead at the start and was never headed. What's more, each won by the same margin—one length!

In the order of their triumphs the horses were Mrs. John D. Hertz's Our Reigh and B. M. Byers' Thorson and behind the two over the mile and a sixteenth course trailed some of the best distance runners at this plant.

Stays in Front.

Our Reigh had things more his own way than did Thorson, but both were driving at the finish. In the fifth race, Jackey Wayne Wright whipped Our Reigh into the lead as the starting bell rang and with the exception of a mild bid by Official as the field swung into the stretch he was never threatened.

On the other hand, Thorson, with Jockey Bobby Merritt in the saddle, had repeated challenges from Judy O'Grady for at least a mile of his race. However, with the important finishing line approaching, Thorson answered Merritt's call for extra speed and was drawing clear at the end.

The crowd of 7,000 bet $8,070 in the daily double, the majority of which went to the backers of the 3—6 combination representing Strophe in the first race and Jay Jay in the third race. This group collected $120.30 for each $2 investment.

Strophe, a field horse, came through with a closing spurt that accounted for the first race at a $14 mutuel. Among others Strophe, ridden by Freddie Faust, the Washington boy, defeated Chambersburger and Aura. Chambersburger set most of the pace, but had little left when Strophe turned on the power. A field of 12 accepted the issue at 6 furlongs.

Our Ship Is Winner.

Our Ship, winner of a race here Saturday in a better field, went postward today and outclassed his opposition over the mile and one-sixteenth course while in the role of a $4.60 favorite. Vanda Cerulea did most of the pace-setting but could not resist the winner. Red Label was third in the field of nine.

Jay Jay, a son of Wise Counsellor, created an upset in the third race when he defeated the favored My Colin by two lengths. The race was between the two from the start, but Bobby Merritt kept his mount in the center of the track while My Colin was operating along the rail in the heaviest going. Nightcap was a well-beaten third in the sprint field. Jay Jay paid a $19.60 mutuel.

Trainer Preston Burch, of Washington, put over another of his many "good things" in the fourth race when Greek Fire outclassed his opposition in a sprint. Greek Fire defeated Moonson, a $49.30 place proposition, by 2½ lengths, with Boston Brook third. Greek Fire's odds remained at 20-1 during most of the betting, but with the horses nearing the post 8-1 was shown. He paid $17.80.

A. C. Compton's Church Call won the finale in a stretch drive to pay a $7.30 mutuel.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STROPHE (field), $14.00, $8.10, $4.50; CHAMBERSBURGER, $12.50, $5.90; AURA, $3.40.

STROPHE, prominent from the beginning, responded to strong urging after reaching the home stretch, and, closing gamely, wore CHAMBERSBURGER down in the last sixteenth. CHAMBERSBURGER had a lot taken out of him to reach the leaders and raced in the deeper footing and weakened under punishment in the closing furlong. AURA, in the first flight from the beginning, continued gamely for the final test. KNIGHT WARRIOR closed stoutly in the last five-sixteenths. CARELESS KNIGHT saved ground when bettering his position and came willingly at the end. MISS GLORY was hard ridden throughout and raced well. TRUJILLO lacked speed and could not enter contention. STARBOROUGH weakened steadily after a half mile. MARKME tired. The others were outrun.

SECOND RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800. For 3-year-olds and upward. Foaled in Maryland. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 1:37. Off at 1:37½. Winner, Mrs. C. Mitchell's b. g. (4), by Constitution—Ima Vamp. Trained by J. R. Booker. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:25, 0:50 3-5, 1:17 2-5, 1:44 3-5, 1:52.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OUR REIGH, $8.60, $4.30, $2.40; OFFICIAL, $3.90, $2.40; BRINDLE, $2.20.

OUR REIGH moved into an easy lead going to the first turn, was taken out into the firmer footing when reaching the back stretch, responded to pressure and outstayed OFFICIAL. Latter, in closest attendance of the winner from the start, closed stoutly in the last five-sixteenths. BRINDLE worked her way up on the outside, but could not make up any ground in the last quarter-mile. COMMONWEALTH could not menace when put to a hard drive. NORTH WALES II was outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000 added. For 2-year-olds. Class C. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:36. Off at 3:38½. Winner, B. M. Byers' ch. c. (3), by Son o' Battle—Axenbroom. Trained by T. H. McCreery. Net value to winner, $770; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:50, 1:16 3-5, 1:44, 1:50 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—THORSON, $8.60, $4.30, $2.60; JUDY O'GRADY, $4.00, $2.60; SIR TEN, $2.30.

THORSON outran his field to the first turn, was steadied until challenged, then responding cheerfully to punishment in the last furlong, came out slowly nearing the finish. JUDY O'GRADY moved up on the outside of the winner in the back stretch, offering repeated bids in the last five-sixteenths, but faltered when kept in the heavier footing during the stretch drive. SIR TEN was under urging from the beginning and closed stubbornly. SUN APOLLO showed a good effort. CONTE was bumped and went to his knees when the break came. He was rushed up fast, but was not good enough.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:06. Off at 4:11. Winner, A. D. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHURCH CALL, $7.30, $3.70, $2.50; STIMULATOR, $5.60, $3.60; LADY MARLBORO, $2.40.

CHURCH CALL, forced to race wide to secure racing room, bettered her position readily after reaching the back stretch, drew to the leaders entering the home stretch, then, closing stoutly, was up in the last sixteenth. STIMULATOR broke in motion, wore HIDDEN DUST down when leaving the back stretch, but could not withstand the winner after gaining a short lead. LADY MARLBORO, kept in the first division, rallied stronger midway final turn, but faltered during the stretch drive. CHIMNEY TOP went close up, saved ground, but tired in the last quarter-mile. DANCING CLOUD could not threaten when hard urged. FUSCO closed a big gap. HIDDEN DUST stopped badly after being overtaken.

Santa Anita's Field Better For 1936

Omaha, Discovery, Other Stars Likely to Seek $125,000 Purse.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—There may be no sentimental favorites in the $125,000 Santa Anita Handicap in California next spring, but it is likely a much more brilliant field will race in the 1936 event than in the first running last year, which saw Equipoise, Twenty Grand and Mate finish in the ruck.

The days of glory of the trio are behind them, but America's richest stake next year will find even faster horses competing for the $100,000 won last February by Azucar, which hasn't won a race since.

Only five horses which raced in the inaugural are considered good enough to make another try. They are Azucar, Ladysman, Time Supply and Top Row, which finished one-two-three-four, and Head Play, which finished next to last, but later raced so sensationally that he won $54,125 before going lame.

Azucar Doubtful Starter.

Whether Azucar will race again is doubtful. Ladysman and Head Play, out of competition most of the season with injuries, are being conditioned for another try at the rich prize. Top Row, with winnings of $78,570, is one of this year's leading handicappers, and Time Supply will be a dangerous contender if he holds his late season form.

In addition to these stalwarts, the great heroes of 1935 racing, Omaha and Discovery, are expected to enter. Both Omaha and Discovery have raced a mile and a quarter in faster times than Equipoise, Twenty Grand and Mate ever recorded during their racing careers.

King Saxon, winner of $38,010 this year, may try for the Santa Anita Stake, though the mile and a quarter distance is considered beyond his powers. This year's 3-year-olds which may join Omaha in an attempt to defeat the older horses are Firethorn, Whopper and Count Arthur, all among the leading stake winners.

Cavalcade, 1934 champion which was made favorite for the 1935 Santa Anita only to be withdrawn, will be schooled for a comeback in the 1936 event. His trainer, Bob Smith, still contends he is a faster horse than Discovery, and intends to try to prove it.

Juveniles Not Considered.

None of this year's juveniles is expected to race in the Santa Anita. An inconsistent lot, none appears capable of winning, and their trainers will have enough to worry about conditioning them for the Kentucky Derby in May, which is considered plenty early enough to set down a young horse over the mile and a quarter distance.

Roosevelt Presents Regatta Cup to Victor

The President's Cup, won in the September regatta by Herbert Mendelsohn's Notre Dame, was presented to the Detroit sportsman by President Roosevelt at the White House yesterday morning.

A distinguished list of guests witnessed the ceremony, including Mrs. Mendelsohn, Clell Perry, who drove the Notre Dame to victory, and Robert V. Fleming, newly elected president of the American Bankers Association and treasurer of the regatta. Following the presentation, there was a luncheon at the Willard Hotel for the guests.

Says Terry Wants Giants, Stoneham Refuses to Sell

By Jimmy Powers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Most all the baseball men in the East have entrained for the minor league meetings at Dayton . . . Bill Terry wants to buy the Giants; Charles Stoneham wants to keep the Giants for his handsome son and heir, Horace . . . Minneapolis and Atlanta are angling for our old pal, Sad Sam Jones . . . Phils think they have a find in Bill Atwood, young Oriole catcher, who cost them Pitcher Jimmy Biven . . . American Olympic basketball committee has ruled that no team can play in the tryouts under the trade name of its commercial or industrial backer. This excellent rule will cramp chiselers of free advertising space.

Many a chocolate magnate, sausage manufacturer and cloak and suiter buys $100 worth of wool jerseys and gaudy numerals, tosses out a hockey puck or basketball and tries to crash the Monday columns next to pure sports reading matter. Some Sunday we will attend the Garden and find embarrassed semi-pros wearing "Goody-goody chocolate bars, 5 cents each" across their bosoms; hotels may further abuse the privilege with the lettering: "Shady Rest Hotel, rooms, $2.50 up; opium smoking positively prohibited—in the lobby."

Stanford may get the Rose Bowl gravy because its only defeat was by "Ringer" Key of the Uclans . . . New York's Siwash is Brooklyn College, which just closed a season of positively no victories in eight starts . . .

Every racketeer in the country is trying to steal Arch Ward's All-Star Game, which drew 77,000 and $250,000 last summer. Now Philly, New Orleans, New York, Florida and Frisco are also trying to stage a similar contest. Archie is going ahead with his contest, which is publicly audited and which divides all profits equally to Catholic, Protestant and Jewish charities. Beattie Feathers, Bronco Nagurski, all members of the Chicago Bears, Cardinals, Green Bay Packers and other strong Western pro teams are solidly behind Ward, the originator of the All-Star game. Stanford is behind Ward 100 per cent. Notre Dame is behind Ward 100 per cent. So is Minnesota, Northwestern, Ohio State, Michigan and other leaders of the Big Ten.

"What burned us up," said Andy Pilney, of the Notre Dame squad, "was the attempt of one syndicate to blackjack us into a new all-star racket. We received letters that we 'might' be named on a certain all-American team 'provided' we agreed to desert Chicago and join the new team. This was so raw—it turned the tide."

Race Tightens In Federal League

THE Federal League concluded its matches last night at the Arcadia alleys with the National Capital Parks, Investigation and G. P. O. leading the pack, respectively, separated from each other by the slim margin of one game. The leading National Capital Parks team lost two games to the last-place I. C. C.'s. Miller and Detterer, rolling on opposing teams, tied for individual game laurels with 140 each.

Four teams are tied for fourth place, Navy Yard, I. B. E. W., Highway and G. P. O. (Union Printers).

Jumbo Bread increased its lead over the Office team in the Sanico League last night at the Convention Hall, whitewashing Certified Eggs, while Office took a three-game setback from Sanico Signs. Tom Bradford contributed a 373 set to boost the leaders, team game and set to 554 and 1,626, respectively.

Andy Gleeson, prominent District football and basketball star, extended his versatility to maple shooting in the Works Progress Administration League, where he collected a 162 game and 367 set, both new season records.

The Orientals maintained the leadership of the Procurement League last night at the Recreation Alleys, downing the Corinthians three games. Quinn, of the Imperials, shot a 156 game, and Rawson a 379 set.

Two season records fell before the sharpshooting of the Navigation team in the Navy Department League at Arcadia, Van Horn chalking up a high set of 392 and the team a set of 1,725. Brigham, of the Commandants, shot high game of the night with 144 and Construction's 579 was the best team game.

LAST place in the inter-high series will be at stake when Western and Roosevelt meet today, but despite the prosaic honors hanging on the result the game figures to draw at least 2,000 spectators to Central Stadium.

Rivalry between Western and Roosevelt has never lacked fire and fervor which probably will be more or less apparent at the 3:15 kick-off and for the ensuing hour and a half. With the added prospect impending of two teams desperately battling to avoid the cellar regions, the contest assumes interesting proportions to say the least.

It would be much more interesting, especially for the Rough Riders, if John Hatch, the Western quarterback, who throws all, punts all and runs very much for the Georgetowners, is again running around in his No. 44 jersey. Hatch will have a doctor examine the gashed knee he received in the Eastern game this morning with the hope the medico will consent to his playing.

Coach Dan Ahern, however, did not believe he would see much action, if any. Ahern did not include him in his starting line-up, pointing out that Hatch has not been able to practice for nearly two weeks.

Western Favored.

With Hatch on the sidelines, Western would still loom a slight favorite to spill the somewhat riddled Rough Riders, although neither team has scored a touchdown thus far in the series. Roosevelt nonetheless has a slight advantage from the scoring standpoint, having stowed away all of two points in the form of a safety against none other than Central's inter-high champions.

Retracing the past history of the Roosevelt-Western rivalry includes mention of last year's game, when Phil Maloney, Western quarterback, had to pull an 80-yard run to beat the Rough Riders. Western was highly favored to win about as it pleased, incidentally.

The biggest threat Roosevelt probably will unveil today will be the passing and punting of Francis Beamer. The big co-captain and end has failed to match his masterful punting with a like display of passing, however, packing considerably more distance ability than accuracy on his throws. His talent at passing has hence been more or less wasted, despite the fact that he has two or three excellent pass receivers among his teammates.

By Dave Herman.

A PALL has been cast over Indian Spring Country Club, for Mike, the pet dog owned by George Diffenbaugh, professional, has yapped his last.

Mike, beloved by hundreds of golfers in Washington and Baltimore, official mascot at Indian Spring and pride and joy of Diffenbaugh, died during the rainy, dreary week-end exactly three months after he was born.

"Distemper" was advanced as the cause of his death by the veterinarian, who worked for three days on the ill canine in an effort to save his life.

Mike slept in the golf shop—in a soft, comfortable box near the stove. His familiar bow-wow-wow would greet Diffenbaugh each morning as he opened the shop. He was just beginning to learn how to trail his master down the fairways when death removed him.

The passing of Mike was a blow to Diffenbaugh, who considered the little pup his good luck charm after he broke a ten-year jinx and won the District Open Championship at Indian Spring a few weeks ago. It was an added blow inasmuch as George's last pet, Shorty, a streamlined beagle, died at the height of his popularity in the spring of 1933.

Shorty was buried in the rough of the eighteenth fairway—his grave bearing the epitaph that he was the finest pet dog ever to romp about the Indian Spring course.

Death struck again in Shorty's family last year when his son, Stymie, owned by Mr. and Mrs. William Harvey, former Indian Spring members, died after being "dognaped" by persons unknown.

Hockey Play Opens.

Play in the annual girls' hockey tournament at the University of Maryland will open this afternoon, with the two teams from the freshman class being matched.

Impellittiere to Fight Smith in Return Bout

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Ray Impellittiere, New York heavyweight, who won a disputed decision from Ford Smith, of California, at Detroit last week, today signed to meet Smith in a return bout in the Chicago Stadium. Mike Jacobs, who will stage the show, will announce the date tomorrow.

Gene Buffalo Defeated by Bill Eley

600 See Dubious Verdict After Furious Bout; Mollis Victor.

THE merry fistic feud between Gene Buffalo and Billy Eley came to another anticlimax at the Lincoln Colonnade last night when Eley was awarded a very dubious decision over the Philadelphia Flurry after ten rounds of hectic glove waving.

A crowd of about 600 watched the two colored welterweights attempt to settle the question of superiority which was left in doubt by a previous draw decision. A crowd of about 596—the other four were Eley himself, a relative and the two officials who voted him the winner—went away with the question still unsolved, but convinced Buffalo had earned no worse than a draw in the battling.

Tommy Mollis, Baltimore lightweight, punched out a surprise decision over Baby Kid Chocolate, of Atlantic City, in an eight-round semifinal which lived up to the high standard set by the rest of the card. Mollis was slow starting, but once he got under way he romped home an easy winner.

Tom Hutcherson, a Philadelphia featherweight, made an auspicious debut in the Capital by scoring a third-round technical knockout over one Al Mathews in a preliminary scheduled for six rounds.

In other six-round preliminaries, Sammy Williams decisioned Johnny Freeman and Jack Grant scored a second-round technical knockout over Al Thompson.

Gallagher and Burke In Exhibition Tonight

A boxing show will be presented at Our Lady of Victory gymnasium, Conduit and River roads, tonight at 8:30. Marty Gallagher, District heavyweight favorite, will box a four-round exhibition with Kirk Burke, former District amateur heavyweight champion.

Plumbers Open Season.

The Bovello Plumbers courtmen, who performed under the banner of Stewart's Pharmacy last year, will open their season tonight on the Eastern High School floor, where they play Coffey Sales Co. at 9:30 o'clock. Dick Fitzgerald, Bob McVean and all members of last year's Stewart quintet will wear the Bovello insignia.

Phi Sigma Kappa Wins Maryland Frat Title

Phi Sigma Kappa footballers gained the Maryland interfraternity championship by virtue of their 6-to-0 victory over the hitherto undefeated Theta Chi eleven. A pass Dale Patterson to Warren Evans and the latter's 50-yard run to a touchdown provided the winning margin.

StockExchange Brokers Move To Incorporate

Partnerships Penalized by Taxation, Member Firms Say.

New York, Nov. 18.—Incorporation of member firms is being discussed by the New York Stock Exchange. The constitution of the exchange provides only for partnerships as member firms. The suggestion that firms be allowed to incorporate has been brought to officials of the exchange by a number of important commission houses.

Counsel for these firms have been studying the implications of the change and counsel for the stock exchange will consider the problem.

Two conditions would have to be met to satisfy governors of the exchange that incorporation of member firms would not affect adversely the present relationship between the firms and the public and between the firms and the exchange. First, the liability of the principals in the firm to the customers would have to be continued. Second, the jurisdiction of the stock exchange over the corporation would have to be complete.

Commission firms argue that because of the rules of the exchange they are penalized by taxation that is not incurred by other businesses. Since they have to be partnerships, the earnings of the firm are subject to Federal income taxes at the rates applicable to the individual members, whether there is any distribution of earnings or not. Consequently earnings must expand enormously in order to make up the losses of poor years after payment of taxes and thus to preserve the capital necessary in the business.

Newark Airport Plans First Cotton Runway

New York, Nov. 18.—Specifications for improvement of the Newark (N. J.) Airport include provision for installation of the world's first cotton runway, according to the Cotton Textile Institute. One of the principal runways, 200 feet wide and 700 feet long, will require more than 15,000 square yards of a specially designed mesh fabric to be used as a reinforcing membrane between a stabilized base and the asphalt top surfacing. The construction absorbs the equivalent, in fabric, of from six to eight bales of cotton for each mile of 18-foot road or runway built, the institute says.

Stocks Hold Firm Against Profit-taking in Active Trading; Wheat Advances.

New York, Nov. 18.—This was another active day in financial markets, but ground gained was less extensive than in some recent sessions. In stocks the good groups were the utilities, rails, building, mail orders and metals, others being irregular. Strength was eaten into by profit takers in last hour, but the effect of the trading was nevertheless bullish. Turnover was around 3,250,000 shares. Bonds were quiet. December wheat closed ⅝ of a cent higher at 97 cents a bushel.

Stocks were a shade less confident, but during the spells of bullishness a long list of issues, including some of the industrial leaders, sold at new high prices for the year or longer. Among the gainers were United States Steel, Consolidated Gas, Western Union, Sears, Montgomery Ward and Telephone. Railroad shares began higher, but were not much of a success as market leaders. Fractions were all most of them could gain. Whisky stocks were weak for a while on the lower Canadian duties.

Public utility issues came to the front in the afternoon business and demand for several of them was considerable. Another strong section was that of the mail orders. Farm implements developed some irregularity, as did the steels in the late trading. Midday was marked by a lively market in metal and mining shares. Silvers climbed 2 points or so and a few of the coppers mounted to new high levels. Gold stocks were quoted a little lower.

Great Northern was the leader of the rails, rising a point to a new high price. Chesapeake and Central were firm. Some of the rail equipments advanced 1 to 3 points. Motor stocks had their smooth going as well as their bumps. Chrysler touched 90, but failed to hold. General Motors made a new high mark, but also sold off. Mack Trucks was strong.

Building shares were uniformly strong. Corn Products slipped 2 points or so with the liquors. Specialties to go up a distance were Woolen common and preferred, Coca-Cola, Continental Can, Curtis Publishing, Glidden, Underwood, Superheater and Container.

Moral Suasion in Trade.

Markets showed little nervousness over the beginning of economic sanctions against Italy. Whatever the merits of the case are, as concerns Italian aggression and the League of Nation's assumption of a duty to restrain Italy, economic sanctions is regarded as a form of war, and wars and trade in long run do not mix well. Cutting Italy off from the ordinary channels of trade with nearly all countries in Europe probably will cut down both exports to Italy and imports out of the country, and in any event it will greatly disturb the flow of trade. In sum, the sanctions will act as a brake on world trade recovery, at a time when everything possible that can be done is needed to stimulate trade expansion.

This country's course still is a matter of conjecture. The policy of exhortation which now seems to be in force is looked upon with a deal of misgiving in this section of the country, for extra legal means always are of doubtful value. Whatever might be said in favor of a legal embargo on shipments of goods to Italy, or designed to go there, little can be heard in business circles in favor of putting the decision and the blame on producers of goods. Shipments are likely to go on as before.

It is not, as some people so easily assume, the broker and the banker who are likely to fatten on foreign trade with belligerents; rather it is the producers of the goods, i. e., the oil producers, the copper miners, the cotton planters, the motor car and truck makers, farmers and industrials generally. The individual it would seem is entitled to sell where he can, unless expressly forbidden by law as a war measure, and the corporation management owes it to the owners to produce and sell in legitimate trade as much as they can. Moral suasion has made a sorry mess of finance, and it is likely to as poorly with industry and commerce.

Market Magnet.

Were no pressure from Washington being brought to bear on American producers to halt sales that may be designed for Italian consumption, the trade agreement just concluded with Canada might have been considered in a somewhat different light. It is a little early to see whether, on the whole, more will be gained than lost, but it would appear that some important industries at least had been given a boost to their trade with Canada. Others probably will be injured.

Meanwhile the industrial indices continue to point to well sustained activity. This week the steel industry will move up to an operating rate of 53.7 per cent of capacity, highest since the middle of June of last year. With a firmer tendency in prices, the industry is now in a good position, and its rising activity reflects better trade throughout the country.

The stock market now seems to be moving along an inflation course with some momentum that might withstand even a moderate business setback. It scarcely could go as far as it has without a good background of business recovery, but inflation prospects, in the opinion of many competent observers, are well in the foreground. The high trading volume is somewhat misleading, as some estimates place the amount of speculation among stock exchange members trading for their own accounts on the floor of the exchange as close to three-fourths of the total volume. However, of the remainder the bulk appears to be cash buying for investment. The country is not yet rushing head over heels into the stock market, but the magnet is daily drawing nearer its little affinities.

Foreign currencies were not greatly disturbed by sanctions. Presumably the Bank of France ceased to act as the pegging agent for the lira, but the Italian authorities found other means to control the currency.

Local Bankers Congratulate A. B. A. Chief

Flowers Greet Robert V. Fleming on Return From Convention.

Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank and elected president of the American Bankers Association at the sixty-first annual convention of that organization last week in New Orleans, found scores of messages of congratulation and an enormous bouquet of flowers from local bankers and business men awaiting him when he returned to his desk yesterday.

One of the high points of the convention, he said, was the contest between expansion of chain banking and unit or individual banking. The divergence of views was reflected in the contest for second vice president between E. G. Bennett, of Utah, a champion of the chain system, and Orval W. Adams, also of Utah, a vigorous supporter of the unit banking. Of Mr. Adams, in whose favor Mr. Bennett withdrew, Mr. Fleming said:

"He is an able and successful banker, does his own thinking and will not be controlled by anybody."

Virtually all the other bankers who constituted the largest local delegation on record to attend an A. B. A. convention had returned to the city yesterday. They were unanimous in praise of Thomas J. Groom, second vice president of the District Bankers Association, who made all the transportation arrangements for the Washington bankers attending the convention.

Institute Estimates Steel Capacity 53.7%

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The American Iron & Steel Institute today estimated steel production during the current week at 53.7 per cent of capacity, compared with 52.6 per cent of capacity in the preceding week. A month ago production was at the rate of 51.8 per cent of capacity and a year ago it was 27.6 per cent.

The estimated operating rate for the current week is the highest since the week of June 18, 1934.

Du Pont Votes General Motors Stock as Bonus

By the Associated Press.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 18.—Directors of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. declared today a special dividend of 1-55 of a share of General Motors common stock on each share of du Pont common, payable December 27 to stockholders of record November 27.

The distribution will be made from 200,000 shares of General Motors common, acquired by du Pont in small lots as a current, temporary investment, during the last five years. It is entirely divorced from the permanent investment of 10,000,000 shares of General Motors held by du Pont.

The directors also declared the regular dividend of 90 cents a share on the $20 par value du Pont common, payable December 14 to stockholders of record November 27, and the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the debenture stock, payable January 25 to stockholders of record January 10.

The company pointed out that the dividend of General Motors stock has no bearing on the recent 50-cent extra dividend declared by that corporation.

Auto Output Nears 100,000 Per Week

Detroit, Nov. 18 (AP).—The production division of the motor car industry is slowly stepping up its output toward the 100,000 units a week mark. Figures compiled by Cram's Reports, Inc., show the industry last week assembled 93,177 cars and trucks, compared with 89,095 the previous week and 16,810 in the comparable period of 1934.

Commenting on the outlook, Cram's says:

"Heavy influx of orders from show centers has resulted in an accumulation of orders and forecasts that the present high rate of activity will continue for many more weeks."

Start, $500 Cash; Sales, $50,000,000

Detroit, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Sabath Congressional committee, reopening hearings here, received testimony today that the United States Bond & Mortgage Co. grew from a firm with $500 paid-in capital in 1915 to a concern which had sold $50,000,000 in bonds by the time of its collapse in 1930.

Howard C. Wade, former president, said in relating the history of the company that it had earned $5,000,000 in commissions. He testified that the United States Fidelity & Surety Co. and the Maryland Casualty Co. were obliged to get a $21,000,000 loan from the RFC to make good their guarantee of bonds sold by United States Bond & Mortgage.
